THE HOUSE ON THE BRAE

ON the bump of green round which the brae twists, at the top of the brae, and within cry of T'nowhead Farm, still stands a one-storey house, whose white-washed walls, streaked with the discoloration that rain leaves, look yellow when the snow comes. In the old days the stiff ascent left Thrums behind, and where is now the making of a suburb was only a poor row of dwellings and a manse, with Hendry's cot to watch the brae. The house stood bare, without a shrub, in a garden whose paling did not go all the way round, the potato-pit being only kept out of the road, that here sets off southward, by a broken dyke of stones and earth. On each side of the slate-coloured door was a window of knotted glass. Ropes were flung over the thatch to keep the roof on in wind.

Into this humble abode I would take any one who cares to accompany me. But you must not come in a contemptuous mood, thinking that the poor are but a stage removed from beasts of burden, as some cruel writers of these days say : nor will I have you turn over with your foot the shabby horse-hair chairs that Leeby kept so speckless, and Hendry weaved for years to buy, and Jess so loved to look upon.

I speak of the chairs, but if we go together into the ' room ' they will not be visible to you. For a long time the house has been to let. Here, on the left of the doorway, as we enter, is the room, without a shred of furniture in it except the boards of two closed-in beds. The flooring is not steady, and here and there holes have been eaten into the planks. You can scarcely stand upright beneath the decaying ceiling. Worn boards and ragged walls, and the rusty ribs fallen from the fireplace, are all that meet your eyes, but I see a round, unsteady, waxcloth-covered table, with four books lying at equal distances on it. There are six prim chairs, two of them not to be sat upon, backed against the walls, and between the window and the fireplace a chest of drawers, with a snowy coverlet. On the drawers stands a board with coloured marbles for the game of solitaire, and I have only to open the drawer with the loose handle to bring out the dambrod. In the carved wood frame over the window hangs Jamie's portrait ; in the only other frame a picture of Daniel in the den of lions, sewn by Leeby in wool. Over the chimney-piece with its shells, in which the roar of the sea can be heard, are strung three rows of birds' eggs. Once again we might be expecting company to tea.

The passage is narrow. There is a square hole between the rafters, and a ladder leading up to it. You may climb and look into the attic, as Jess liked to hear me call my tiny garret-room. I am stiffer now than in the days when I lodged with Jess during the summer holiday I am trying to bring back, and there is no need for me to ascend. Do not laugh at the newspapers with which Leeby papered the garret, nor at the yarn Hendry stuffed into the windy holes. He did it to warm the house for Jess. But the paper must have gone to pieces and the yarn rotted decades ago.

I have kept the kitchen for the last, as Jamie did on the dire day of which I shall have to tell. It has a flooring of stone now, where there used only to be hard earth, and a broken pane in the window is indifferently stuffed with rags. But it is the other window I turn to, with a pain at my heart, and pride and fondness too, the square foot of glass where Jess sat in her chair and looked down the brae.

Ah, that brae! The history of tragic little Thrums is sunk into it like the stones it swallows in the winter. We have all found the brae long and steep in the spring of life. Do you remember how the child you once were sat at the foot of it and wondered if a new world began at the top? It climbs from a shallow burn, and we used to sit on the brig a long time before venturing to climb. As boys we ran up the brae. As men and women, young and in our prime, we almost forgot that it was there. But the autumn of life comes, and the brae grows steeper ; then the winter, and once again we are as the child pausing apprehensively on the brig. Yet are we no longer the child ; we look now for no new world at the top, only for a little garden and a tiny house, and a hand-loom in the house. It is only a garden of kail and potatoes, but there may be a line of daisies, white and red on each side of the narrow footpath, and honeysuckle over the door. Life is not always hard, even after backs grow bent, and we know that all braes lead only to the grave.

This is Jess's window. For more than twenty years she has not been able to go so far as the door, and only once while I knew her was she ben in the room. With her husband, Hendry, or their only daughter, Leeby, to lean upon, and her hand clutching her staff, she took twice a day, when she was strong, the journey between her bed and the window where stood her chair. She did not lie there looking at the sparrows or at Leeby redding up the house, and I hardly ever heard her complain. All the sewing was done by her ; she often baked on a table pushed close to the window, and by leaning forward she could stir the porridge. Leeby was seldom off her feet, but I do not know that she did more than Jess, who liked to tell me, when she had a moment to spare, that she had a terrible lot to be thankful for.

To those who dwell in great cities Thrums is only a small place, but what a clatter of life it has for me when I come to it from my schoolhouse in the glen. Had my lot been cast in a town I would no doubt have sought country parts during my September holiday, but the schoolhouse is quiet even when the summer takes brakes full of sportsmen and others past the top of my footpath, and I was always light-hearted when Craigiebuckle's cart bore me into the din of Thrums. I only once stayed during the whole of my holiday at the house on the brae, but I knew its inmates for many years, including Jamie, the son, who was a barber in London. Of their ancestry I never heard. With us it was only some of the articles of furniture, or perhaps a snuff-mull. that had a genealogical tree. In the house on the brae was a great kettle, called the boiler, that was said to be fifty years old in the days of Hendry's grandfather, of whom nothing more is known. Jess's chair, which had carved arms and a seat stuffed with rags, had been Snecky Hobart's father's before it was hers, and old Snecky bought it at a roup in the Tenements. Jess's rarest possession was, perhaps, the christening robe that even people at a distance came to borrow. Her mother could count up a hundred persons who had been baptized in it.

Every one of the hundred, I believe, is dead, and even I cannot now pick out Jess and Hendry's grave, but I heard recently that the christening robe is still in use. It is strange that I should still be left after so many changes, one of the three or four who can to-day stand on the brae and point out Jess's window. The little window commands the incline to the point where the brae suddenly jerks out of sight in its climb down into the town. The steep path up the commonty makes for this elbow of the brae, and thus, whichever way the traveller takes, it is here that he comes first into sight of the window. Here, too, those who go to the town from the south get their first glimpse of Thrums.

Carts pass up and down the brae every few minutes, and there comes an occasional gig. Seldom is the brae empty, for many live beyond the top of it now, and men and women go by to their work, children to school or play. Not one of the children I see from the window to-day is known to me, and most of the men and women I only recognise by their likeness to their parents. That sweet-faced old woman with the shawl on her shoulders may be one of the girls who was playing at the game of palaulays when Jamie stole into Thrums for the last time ; the man who is leaning on the commony gate gathering breath for the last quarter of the brae may, as a barefooted callant, have been one of those who chased Cree Queery past the poorhouse. I cannot say ; but this I know, that the grandparents of most of these boys and girls were once young with me. If I see the sons and daughters of my friends grown old, I also see the grandchildren spinning the peerie and hunkering at I-dree-I-dree—I-droppit-it—as we did so long ago. The world remains as young as ever. The lovers that met on the commonty in the gloaming are gone, but there are other lovers to take their place, and still the commonty is here. The sun had sunk on a fine day in June, early in the century, when Hendry and Jess, newly married, he in a rich moleskin waistcoat, she in a white net cap, walked to the house on the brae that was to be their home. So Jess has told me. Here again has been just such a day, and somewhere in Thrums there may be just such a couple, setting out for their home behind a horse with white ears instead of walking, but with the same hopes and fears, and the same lovelight in their eyes. The world does not age. The hearse passes over the brae and up the straight burying-ground road, but still there is a cry for the christening robe.

Jess's window was a beacon by night to travellers in the dark, and it will be so in the future when there are none to remember Jess.

There are many such windows still, with loving faces behind them. From them we watch for the friends and relatives who are coming back, and some, alas ! watch in vain. Not every one returns who takes the elbow of the brae bravely, or waves his handkerchief to those who watch from the window with wet eyes, and some return too late. To Jess, at her window always when she was not in bed, things happy and mournful and terrible came into view. At this window she sat for twenty years or more looking at the world as through a telescope ; and here an awful ordeal was gone through after her sweet untarnished soul had been given back to God.

CHAPTER I:

ON THE TRACK OF THE MINISTER

ON the afternoon of the Saturday that carted me and my two boxes to Thums, I was ben in the room playing Hendry at the dambrod. I had one of the room chairs, but Leeby brought a chair from the kitchen for her father. Our door stood open, and as Hendry often pondered for two minutes with his hand on a 'man,' I could have joined in the gossip that was going on but the house.

'Ay, weel, then, Leeby,' said Jess suddenly, 'I'll warrant the minister'll no be preachin' the morn.'

This took Leeby to the window.

'Yea, yea,' she said (and I knew she was nodding her head sagaciously); I looked out at the room window, but all I could see was a man wheeling an empty barrow down the brae.

'I thocht Johnny said to ye 'at it was for a present to Chirsty's auntie ?'

'Ay, but he juist guessed that ; for, though he tried to get oot o' Chirsty what she wanted the chintz for, she wouldna tell 'im. But I see noo what she was after. The lad Wilkie'll be to bide wi' them, and Chirsty had bocht the chintz to cover the airm-chair wi'. It's ane o' thae hair-bottomed chairs, but terrible torn, so she'll hae covered it for 'im to sit on.'

'I wouldna wonder but ye're richt, Leeby ; for Chirsty would be in an oncommon fluster if she thocht the lad's mither was likely to hear 'at her best chair was torn. Ay, ay, bein' a man, he wouldna think to tak off the chintz an hae a look at the chair withoot it.'

Here Hendry, who had paid no attention to the conversation, broke in—

'Was ye speirin' had I seen Sam'l Duthie ? I saw 'im yesterday buyin' a fender at Will'um Crook's roup.'

'A fender ! Ay, ay, that settles the queis-tion,' said Leeby ; 'I'll warrant the fender was for Chirsty's parlour. It's preyed on Chirsty's mind, they say, this fower-and-thirty year 'at she doesna hae a richt parlour tender.'

'Leeby, look! That's Robbie Tosh wi' the barrow. He has a mighty load o' luggage. A'm thinkin' the minister's bound for Tilliedrum.'

'Na, he's no, he's gaen to Oldinbory, as ye might ken by the bandbox. That'll be his mither's bonnet he's takkin bac : to get altered. Ye'll mind she was never pleased wi' the set o' the flowers.'

'Weel, weel, here comes the minister himsel, an' very snod he is. Ay, Marget's been puttin' new braid on his coat, an' he's carryin' the sma' black bag he bocht in Dundee last year : he'll hae's nicht-shirt an' a comb in 't, I dinna doot. Ye might rin to the corner, Leeby, an' see if he cries in at Jess McTaggart's in passin'.'

'It's my opeenion,' said Leeby, returning excitedly from the corner, 'at the lad Wilkie's no to be preachin' the morn after a'. When I gangs to the corner, at ony rate, what think ye's the first thing I see but the minister an' Sam'l Duthie meetin' face to face? Ay, weel, it's gospel a'm tellin' ye when I say as Sam'l flung back his head an' walkit richt by the minister !'

' Losh keep 's a', Leeby ; ye say that ? They maun hae haen a quarrel.'

' I 'm thinkin' we 'll hae Mr. Skinner i' the poopit the morn after a'.'

' It may be, it may be. Ay, ay, look, Leeby, whatna bit kimmer's that wi' the twa jugs in her hand ?'

' Eh ? Ou, it 'll be Lawyer Ogilvy's servant lassieky gaen to the farm o' T'nowhead for the milk. She gangs ilka Saturday nicht. But what did ye say—twa jugs ? Tod, let 's see ! Ay, she has so, a big jug an' a little ane. The little ane 'll be for cream ; an', sal, the big ane 's bigger na usual.'

' There maun be something gaen on at the lawyer's if they 're buyin' cream, Leeby. Their reg'lar thing 's twopence worth o' milk.'

' Ay, but I assure ye that sma' jug's for cream, an' I dinna doot mysel but 'at there's to be fowerpence worth o' milk this nicht.'

' There's to be a puddin' made the morn, Leeby. Ou, ay, a' thing points to that ; an'

we're very sure there's nae puddin's at the lawyer's on the Sabbath unless they hae company.'

'I dinna ken wha they can hae, if it be na that brither o' the wife's 'at bides oot by Aberdeen.'

'Na, it's no him, Leeby; na, na. He's no weel to do, an' they wouldna be buyin' cream for 'im.'

'I'll run up to the attic again, an' see if there's ony stir at the lawyer's hoose.'

By and by Leeby returned in triumph.

'Ou, ay,' she said, 'they're expeckin' veesitors at the lawyer's, for I could see twa o' the bairns dressed up to the nines, an' Mistress Ogilvy doesna dress them in that wy for naething.'

'It fair beats me though, Leeby, to guess wha's comin' to them. Ay, but stop a meenute, I wouldna wonder, no, really I would not wonder but what it'll be——'

'The very thing 'at was passin' through my head, mother.'

'Ye mean 'at the lad Wilkie'll be to bide wi'

the lawyer i'stead o' wi' Sam'l Duthie? Sal, a'm thinkin' that's it. Ye ken Sam'l an' the lawyer married on cousins; but Mistress Ogilvy ay lookit on Chirsty as dirt aneath her feet. She would be glad to get a minister, though, to the hoose, an' so I warrant the lad Wilkie'll be to bide a' nicht at the lawyer's.'

'But what would Chirsty be doin' gettin' the chintz an' the fender in that case?'

'Ou, she'd been expeckin' the lad, of course. Sal, she'll be in a mighty tantrum aboot this. I wouldna wonder though she gets Sam'l to gang ower to the U.P.'s.'

Leeby went once more to the attic.

'Ye're wrang, mother,' she cried out. 'Whatever's to preach the morn is to bide at the manse, for the minister's servant's been at Baker Duff's buyin' shortbread—half a lippy, nae doot.'

'Are ye sure o' that, Leeby?'

'Oh, a'm certain. The servant gaed in to Duff's the noo, an', as ye ken fine, the manse fowk doesna deal wi' him, except they're wantin' shortbread. He's Auld Kirk.'

Leeby returned to the kitchen, and Jess sat for a time ruminating.

‘The lad Wilkie,’ she said at last, triumphantly, ‘’ll be to bide at Lawyer Ogilvy’s; but he’ll be gaen to the manse the morn for a tea-dinner.’

‘But what,’ asked Leeby, ‘aboot the milk an’ the cream for the lawyer’s?’

‘Ou, they ’ll be ha’en a puddir’ for the supper the nicht. That ’s a mighty genteel thing, I’ve heard.’

It turned out that Jess was right in every particular.

CHAPTER III

PREPARING TO RECEIVE COMPANY

LEEBy was at the fire brandering a quarter of steak on the tongs, when the house was flung into consternation by Hendry's casual remark that he had seen Tibbie Mealmaker in the town with her man.

'The Lord preserve 's !' cried Leeby.

Jess looked quickly at the clock.

'Half fower !' she said excitedly.

'Then it canna be dune,' said Leeby, falling despairingly into a chair, 'for they may be here ony meenute.'

'It 's most mighty,' said Jess, turning on her husband, ''at ye should tak a pleasure in bringin' this hoose to disgrace. Hoo did ye no tell 's suner ?'

'I fair forgot,' Hendry answered, 'but what 's a' yer steer ?'

Jess looked at me (she often did this) in a way that meant, 'What a man is this I'm tied to!'

'Steer!' she exclaimed. 'Is't no time we was makkin a steer? They'll be in for their tea ony meenute, an' the room no sae muckle as sweepit. Ay, and me look a' like a sweep; and Tibbie Mealmaker 'at's sae partikler genteel seein' you sic a sight as ye are.'

Jess shook Hendry out of his chair, while Leeby began to sweep with one hand, and agitatedly to unbutton her wrapper with the other.

'She didna see me,' said Hendry, sitting down forlornly on the table.

'Get aff that table!' cried Jess. 'See haud o' the besom,' she said to Leeby.

'For mercy's sake, mother,' said Leeby, 'gie yer face a dicht, an' put on a clean mutch.'

'I'll open the door if they come afore you're ready,' said Hendry, as Leeby pushed him against the dresser.

'Ye daur to speak aboot openin' the door, an' you sic a mess!' cried Jess, with pins in her mouth.

'Havers!' retorted Hendry. 'A man canna be aye washin' at 'imself.'

Seeing that Hendry was as much in the way as myself, I invited him upstairs to the attic, whence we heard Jess and Leeby upbraiding each other shrilly. I was aware that the room was speckless; but for all that, Leeby was turning it upside down.

‘She’s aye ta’en like that,’ Hendry said to me, referring to his wife, ‘when she’s expectin’ company. Ay, it’s a peety she canna tak things cannier.’

‘Tibbie Mealmaker must be some one of importance?’ I asked.

‘Ou, she’s naething by the ord’nar’; but ye see she was mairit to a Tilliedrum man no lang syne, an’ they’re said to hae a mighty grand establishment. Ay, they’ve a wardrobe spleet new; an’ what think ye Tibbie wears ilka day?’

I shook my head.

‘It was Chirsty Miller ’at put it through the toon,’ Hendry continued. ‘Chirsty was in Tilliedrum last Teisday or Wednesday, an’ Tibbie gae her a cup o’ tea. Ay, weel, Tibbie telt Chirsty ’at she wears hose ilka day.’

‘ Wears hose ? ’

‘ Ay. It ’s some mighty grand kind o’ stockin’. I never heard o’t in this toon. Na, there’s naebody in Thrums ’at wears hose.’

‘ And who did Tibbie get ? ’ I asked ; for in Thrums they say, ‘ Wha did she get ? ’ and ‘ Wha did he tak ? ’

‘ His name ’s Davit Curly. Du, a crittur fu o’ maggots, an’ nae great match, for he ’s juist the Tilliedrum bill-sticker.’

At this moment Jess shouted from her chair (she was burnishing the society teapot as she spoke). ‘ Mind, Hendry McQumpha, ’at upon nae condition are ye to mention the bill-stickin’ afore Tibbie ! ’

‘ Tibbie,’ Hendry explained to me, ‘ is a terrible vain tid, an’ doesna think the bill-stickin’ genteel. Ay, they say ’at if she meets Davit in the street wi’ his paste-pot an’ the brush in his hands she pretends no to ken ’im.’

Every time Jess paused to think she cried up orders, such as—‘ Dinna call her Tibbie, mind ye. Always address her as Mistress Curly.’

‘Shak’ hands wi’ baith o’ them, an’ say ye hope they ’re in the enjoyment o’ guid health.’

‘Dinna put yer feet on the table.’

‘Mind, you ’re not to mention ’at ye kent they were in the toon.’

‘When onybody passes ye yer tea, say “Thank ye.”’

‘Dinna stir yer tea as if ye was churnin’ butter, nor let on ’at the scones is no our ain bakin’.’

‘If Tibbie says onything aboot the china ye ’re no to say ’at we dinna use it ilka day.’

‘Dinna lean back in the big chair, for it’s broken, an’ Leeby’s gi’en it a lick o’ glue this meenute.’

‘When Leeby gies ye a kick aneath the table that’ll be a sign to ye to say grace.’

Hendry looked at me apologetically while these instructions came up.

‘I winna deve my head wi’ sic nonsense,’ he said ; ‘it’s no for a man body to be sae crammed fu’ o’ manners.’

‘Come awa doon,’ Jess shouted to him, ‘an’ put on a clean dickey.’

‘I’ll better do ’t to please her,’ said Hendry, ‘though for my ain part I di na like the feel o’ a dickey on week-days. Na, they mak’s think it’s the Sabbath.’

Ten minutes afterwards I went downstairs to see how the preparations were progressing. Fresh muslin curtains had been put up in the room. The grand footstool, worked by Leeby, was so placed that Tibbie could not help seeing it; and a fine cambric handkerchief, of which Jess was very proud, was hanging out of a drawer as if by accident. An antimacassar lying carelessly on the seat of a chair concealed a rent in the horse-hair, and the china ornaments on the mantelpiece were so placed that they looked whole. Leeby’s black merino was hanging near the window in a good light, and Jess’s Sabbath bonnet, which was never worn, occupied a nail beside it. The tea-things stood on a tray in the kitchen bed, whence they could be quickly brought into the room, just as if they were always ready to be used daily. Leeby, as yet in .deshabille, was shaving her father at a tremendous rate, and Jess, looking as fresh as a daisy, was ready to receive the visitors. She was peering through the tiny window-blind looking for them.

‘Be cautious, Leeby,’ Hendry was saying, when Jess shook her hand at him. ‘Wheesht,’ she whispered; ‘they’re comin’.’

Hendry was hustled into his Sabbath coat, and then came a tap at the door, a very genteel tap. Jess nodded to Leeby, who softly shoved Hendry into the room.

The tap was repeated, but Leeby pushed her father into a chair and thrust Barrow’s Sermons open into his hand. Then she stole but the house, and swiftly buttoned her wrapper, speaking to Jess by nods the while. There was a third knock, whereupon Jess said, in a loud, Englishy voice—

‘Was that not a chap (knock) at the door?’

Hendry was about to reply, but she shook her fist at him. Next moment Leeby opened the door. I was upstairs, but I heard Jess say—

‘Dear me, if it’s not Mrs. Curly—and Mr. Curly! And hoo are ye? Come in by. Weel, this is, indeed, a pleasant surprise!’

CHAPTER IV

WAITING FOR THE DOCTOR

JESS had gone early to rest, and the door of her bed in the kitchen was pulled to. From her window I saw Hendry buying dulse.

Now and again the dulseman wheeled his slimy boxes to the top of the brae, and sat there stolidly on the shafts of his barrow. Many passed him by, but occasionally some one came to rest by his side. Unless the customer was loquacious, there was no bandying of words, and Hendry merely unbuttoned his east-trouser pocket, giving his body the angle at which the pocket could be most easily filled by the dulseman. He then deposited his halfpenny, and moved on. Neither had spoken; yet in the country they would have roared their predictions about to-morrow to a ploughman half a field away.

Dulse is roasted by twisting it round the tongs fired to a red heat, and the house was soon heavy with the smell of burning seaweed. Leeby was at the dresser munching it from a broth-plate, while Hendry, on his knees at the fireplace, gingerly tore off the blades of dulse that were sticking to the tongs, and licked his singed fingers.

‘Whaur’s yer mother?’ he asked Leeby.

‘Ou,’ said Leeby, ‘whaur would she be but in her bed?’

Hendry took the tongs to the door, and would have cleaned them himself, had not Leeby (who often talked his interfering ways over with her mother) torn them from his hands.

‘Leeby,’ cried Jess at that moment.

‘Ay,’ answered Leeby, leisurely, not noticing, as I happened to do, that Jess spoke in an agitated voice.

‘What is’t?’ asked Hendry, who liked to be told things.

‘Yer mother’s no weel,’ he said to Leeby.

Leeby ran to the bed, and I went ben the house.

In another two minutes we were a group of four in the kitchen, staring vacantly. Death could not have startled us more tapping thrice that quiet night on the window-pane.

‘It’s diphtheria!’ said Jess, her hands trembling as she buttoned her wrapper.

She looked at me, and Leeby looked at me.

‘It’s no, it’s no,’ cried Leeby, and her voice was as a fist shaken at my face. She blamed me for hesitating in my reply. But ever since this malady left me a lonely dominie for life, diphtheria has been a knockdown word for me. Jess had discovered a great white spot on her throat. I knew the symptoms.

‘Is’t dangerous?’ asked Hendry, who once had a headache years before, and could still refer to it as a reminiscence.

‘Them ’at has’t never recovers,’ said Jess, sitting down very quietly. A stick fell from the fire, and she bent forward to replace it.

‘They do recover,’ cried Leeby, again turning angry eyes on me.

I could not face her; I had known so many who did not recover. She put her hand on her mother’s shoulder.

‘Mebbe ye would be better in yer bed,’ suggested Hendry.

No one spoke.

‘When I had the headache, said Hendry, ‘I was better in my bed.’

Leeby had taken Jess’s hand—a worn old hand that had many a time gone out in love and kindness when younger hands were cold. Poets have sung and fighting men have done great deeds for hands that never had such a record.

‘If ye could eat something,’ said Hendry, ‘I would gae to the flesher’s for’t. I mind when I had the headache, hoo a small steak——’

‘Gae awa for the doctor, rayther,’ broke in Leeby.

Jess started, for sufferers think there is less hope for them after the doctor has been called in to pronounce sentence.

‘I winna hae the doctor,’ she said anxiously.

In answer to Leeby’s nods, Hendry slowly pulled out his boots from beneath the table, and sat looking at them, preparatory to putting them on. He was beginning at last to be a little scared, though his face did not show it.

‘I winna hae ye,’ cried Jess, getting to her feet, ‘gaen to the doctor’s sic a sicht. Yer coat’s a’ yarn.’

‘Havers,’ said Hendry, but Jess became frantic.

I offered to go for the doctor, but while I was upstairs looking for my bonnet I heard the door slam. Leebie had become impatient, and darted off herself, buttoning her jacket probably as she ran. When I returned to the kitchen, Jess and Hendry were still by the fire. Hendry was beating a charred stick into sparks, and his wife sat with her hands in her lap. I saw Hendry look at her once or twice, but he could think of nothing to say. His terms of endearment had died out thirty-nine years before with his courtship. He had forgotten the words. For his life he could not have crossed over to Jess and put his arm round her. Yet he was uneasy. His eyes wandered round the poorly furnished room.

‘Will ye hae a drink o’ watter?’ he asked.

There was a sound of footsteps outside.

‘That ’ll be him,’ said Hendry in a whisper.

Jess started to her feet, and told Hendry to help her ben the house.

The steps died away, but I fancied that Jess, now highly strung, had gone into hiding, and I went after her. I was mistaken. She had lit the room lamp, turning the crack in the globe to the wall. The sheepskin hearthrug, which was generally carefully packed away beneath the bed, had been spread out before the empty fireplace, and Jess was on the arm-chair hurriedly putting on her grand black mutch with the pink flowers.

‘I was juist makkin mysel respectable,’ she said, but without life in her voice.

This was the only time I ever saw her in the room.

Leeby returned panting to say that the doctor might be expected in an hour. He was away among the hills.

The hour passed reluctantly. Leeby lit a fire ben the house, and then put on her Sabbath dress. She sat with her mother in the room.

Never before had I seen Jess sit so quietly, for her way was to work until, as she said herself, she was ready 'to fall into her bed.'

Hendry wandered between the two rooms, always in the way when Leeky ran to the window to see if that was the doctor at last. He would stand gaping in the middle of the room for five minutes, then slowly withdraw to stand as drearily but the house. His face lengthened. At last he sat down by the kitchen fire, a Bible in his hand. It lay open on his knee, but he did not read much. He sat there with his legs outstretched, looking straight before him. I believe he saw Jess young again. His face was very solemn, and his mouth twitched. The fire sank into ashes unheeded.

I sat alone at my attic window for hours, waiting for the doctor. From the attic I could see nearly all Thrums, but, until very late, the night was dark, and the brae, except immediately before the door, was blurred and dim. A sheet of light canopied the square as long as a cheap Jack paraded his goods there. It was gone before the moon came out. Figures tramped up the brae, passed the house in shadow and stole silently on. A man or boy whistling seemed to fill the valley. The moon arrived too late to be of service to any wayfarer. Everybody in Thrums was asleep but ourselves, and the doctor who never came.

About midnight Hendry climbed the attic stair and joined me at the window. His hand was shaking as he pulled back the blind. I began to realise that his heart could still overflow.

‘She’s waur,’ he whispered, like one who had lost his voice.

For a long time he sat silently, his hand on the blind. He was so different from the Hendry I had known that I felt myself in the presence of a strange man. His eyes were glazed with staring at the turn of the brae where the doctor must first come into sight. His breathing became heavier, till it was a gasp. Then I put my hand on his shoulder, and he stared at me.

‘Nine-and-thirty years come June,’ he said, speaking to himself.

For this length of time I knew he and Jess had been married. He repeated the words at intervals.

‘I mind——’ he began, and stopped. He was thinking of the springtime of Jess’s life.

The night ended as we watched; then came the terrible moment that precedes the day—the moment known to shuddering watchers by sick-beds, when a chill wind cuts through the house, and the world without seems cold in death. It is as if the heart of the earth did not mean to continue beating.

‘This is a fearsome night,’ Hendry said hoarsely.

He turned to grope his way to the stairs, but suddenly went down on his knees to pray. . . .

There was a quick step outside. I arose in time to see the doctor on the brae. He tried the latch, but Leeby was there to show him in. The door of the room closed on him.

From the top of the stair I could see into the dark passage, and make out Hendry shaking at the door. I could hear the doctor’s voice, but not the words he said. There was a painful silence, and then Leeby laughed joyously.

‘It’s gone,’ cried Jess; ‘the white spot’s gone! Ye juist touched it, an’ it’s gone! Tell Hendry.’

But Hendry did not need to be told. As Jess spoke I heard him say huskily: ‘Thank God!’ and then he tottered back to the kitchen. When the doctor left, Hendry was still on Jess’s arm-chair, trembling like a man with the palsy. Ten minutes afterwards I was preparing for bed, when he cried up the stair—

‘Come awa doon.’

I joined the family party in the room: Hendry was sitting close to Jess.

‘Let us read,’ he said firmly, ‘in the fourteenth of John.’

CHAPTER V

A HUMORIST ON HIS CALLING

AFTER the eight o'clock bell had rung, Hendry occasionally crossed over to the farm of T'now-head and sat on the pigsty. If no one joined him he scratched the pig, and returned home gradually. Here what was almost a club held informal meetings, at which two or four or even half a dozen assembled to debate, when there was any one to start them. The meetings were only memorable when Tammas Haggart was in fettle, to pronounce judgments in his well-known sarcastic way. Sometimes we had got off the pigsty to separate before Tammas was properly yoked. There we might remain a long time, planted round him like trees, for he was a mesmerising talker.

There was a pail belonging to the pigsty, which some one would turn bottom upwards and sit upon if the attendance was unusually numerous. Tammas liked, however, to put a foot on it now and again in the full swing of a harangue, and when he paused for a sarcasm I have seen the pail kicked toward him. He had the wave of the arm that is so convincing in argument, and such a natural way of asking questions, that an audience not used to public speaking might have thought he wanted them to reply. It is an undoubted fact, that when he went on the platform, at the time of the election, to heckle the Colonel, he paused in the middle of his questions to take a drink out of the tumbler of water which stood on the table. As soon as they saw what he was up to the spectators raised a ringing cheer.

On concluding his perorations, Tammas sent his snuff-mull round, but we had our own way of passing him a vote of thanks. One of the company would express amazement at his gift of words, and the others would add, 'Man, man,' or 'Ye cow, Tammas,' or, 'What a crittur ye are!' all which ejaculations meant the same thing. A new subject being thus ingeniously introduced, Tammas again put his foot on the pail.

‘I tak no credit,’ he said modestly, on the evening, I remember, of Willie Lyatt’s funeral, ‘in bein’ able to speak wi’ a sort o’ faceelity on topics ’at I’ve made my ain.’

‘Ay,’ said T’nowhead, ‘but it’s no the faceelity o’ speakin’ ’at taks me. There’s Davit Lunan ’at can speak like as if he had learned it aff a paper, an’ yet I canna thole ’im.’

‘Davit,’ said Hendry, ‘doesna speak in a wy ’at a body can follow ’im. He doesna gae even on. Jess says he’s juist like a man aye at the cross-roads, an’ no sure o’ his wy. But the stock has words, an’ no ilka body has that.’

‘If I was bidden to put Tammas’s gift in a word,’ said T’nowhead, ‘I would say ’at he had a wy. That’s what I would say.’

‘Weel, I suppose I have,’ Tammas admitted, ‘but, wy or no wy, I couldna put a point on my words if it wasna for my sense o’ humour. Lads, humour’s what gies the nip to speakin’.’

‘It’s what maks ye a sarcecticist, Tammas,’ said Hendry; ‘but what I wonder at is yer sayin' the humorous things sae aisy like. Some says ye mak them up aforehand, but I ken that 's no true.'

'No only is 't no true,' said Tammas, 'but it couldna be true. Them 'at says sic things, an' weel I ken you 're meanin' Davit Lunan, hasnae idea o' what humour is. It's a thing 'at spouts oot o' its ain accord. Some o' the maist humorous things I've ever said cam oot, as a body may say, by themsels.'

'I suppose that 's the case,' said T'nowhead, 'an' yet it maun be you 'at brings them up?'

'There's no nae doubt about its bein' the case,' said Tammas, 'for I've watched mysel often. There was a vara guid instance occurred sune after I married Easie. The Earl's son met me one day, aboot that time, i' the Tenements, an' he didna ken 'at Chirsty was deid, an' I'd married again. "Well, Haggart," he says in his frank wy, "and how is your wife?" "She's vara weel, sir," I maks answer, "but she's no the ane you mean."'

'Na, he meant Chirsty,' said Hendry.

'Is that a' the story?' asked T'nowhead.

Tammas had been looking at us queerly.

'There's no nane o' ye lauch n', he said, 'but I can assure ye the Earl's son gaed east the toon lauchin' like onything.'

'But what was 't he lauched at?'

'Ou,' said Tammas, 'a humorist doesna tell whaur the humour comes in.'

'No, but when you said that, did you mean it to be humorous?'

'A'm no sayin' I did, but as I've been tellin' ye, humour spouts oot by itsel.'

'Ay, but do ye ken noo what the Earl's son gaed awa lauchin' at?'

Tammas hesitated.

'I dinna exactly see 't,' he confessed, 'but that's no an uncommon thing. A humorist would often no ken 'at he was ane if it wasna by the wy he maks other fowk lauch. A body canna be expeckit baith to mak the joke an' to see 't. Na, that would be doin' twa fowks' wark.'

'Weel, that's reasonable enough, but I've often seen ye lauchin',' said Hendry, 'lang afore other fowk lauched.'

‘Nae doubt,’ Tammas explained, ‘an’ that’s because humour has twa sides, juist like a penny piece. When I say a humorous thing mysel I’m dependent on other fowk to tak note o’ the humour o’t, bein’ mysel ta’en up wi’ the makkin o’t. Ay, but there’s things I see an’ hear ’at maks me lauch, an’ that’s the other side o’ humour.’

‘I never heard it put sae plain afore,’ said T’nowhead, ‘an’, sal, a’m no nane sure but what a’m a humorist too.’

‘Na, na, no you, T’nowhead,’ said Tammas hotly.

‘Weel,’ continued the farmer, ‘I never set up for bein’ a humorist, but I can juist assure ye ’at I lauch at queer things too. No lang syne I woke up i’ my bed lauchin’ like onything, an’ Lisbeth thocht I wasna weel. It was something I dreamed ’at made me lauch, I couldna think what it was, but I lauched richt. Was that no fell like a humorist?’

‘That was neither here nor there,’ said Tammas. ‘Na, dreams dinna coont, for we’re no responsible for them. Ay, an’ what’s mair, the mere lauchin's no the important side o' humour, even though ye hinna to be telt to lauch. The important side's the other side, the sayin' the humorous thing. I'll tell ye what: the humorist's like a man firin' at a target—he doesna ken whether he hits or no till them at the target tells 'im.'

'I would be of opeenion,' said Hendry, who was one of Tammas's most staunch admirers, 'at another mark o' the rale humorist was his seein' humour in all things?'

Tammas shook his head—a way he had when Hendry advanced theories.

'I dinna haud wi' that ava,' he said. 'I ken fine 'at Davit Lunan gaes aboot sayin' he sees humour in everything, but there's nae surer sign 'at he's no a genuine humorist. Na, the rale humorist kens vara weel 'at there's subjects withoot a spark o' humour in them. When a subject rises to the sublime it should be regairded philosophically, an' no humorously. Davit would lauch at the grandest thochts, whaur they only fill the true humorist wi' awe. I've found it necessary to rebuke him at times whaur his lauchin' was oot o' place. He pretended aince on this vara spot to see humour in the origin of cock-fightin'.'

'Did he, man?' said Hendry; 'I wasna here. But what is the origin of cock-fechtin'?''

'It was a' in the Cheap Magazine,' said T'nowhead.

'Was I sayin' it wasna?' demanded Tammas. 'It was through me readin' the account oot o' the Cheap Magazine 'at the discussion arose.'

'But what said the Cheapy was the origin o' cock-fechtin'?''

'T'nowhead'll tell ye,' answered Tammas; 'he says I dinna ken.'

'I never said naething o' the kind,' returned T'nowhead indignantly; 'I mind o' ye readin' 't oot fine.'

'Ay, weel,' said Tammas, 'that's a' richt. Ou, the origin o' cock-fightin' gangs back to the time o' the Greek wars, a thoosand or twa years syne, mair or less. There was ane, Miltiades by name, 'at was the Captain o' the Greek army, an' one day he led them doon the mountains to attack the biggest army 'at was ever gathered thegither.'

'They were Persians,' interposed T'nowhead.

'Are you tellin' the story, or am I?' asked Tammas. 'I kent fine 'at they were Persians. Weel, Miltiades had the mat'er o' twenty thoosand men wi' 'im, and when they got to the foot o' the mountain, behold there were two cocks fechtin'.'

'Man, man,' said Hendry, 'an' was there cocks in thae days?'

'Ondoubtedly,' said Tammas, 'or hoo could thae twa hae been fechtin'?''

'Ye have me there, Tammas,' admitted Hendry. 'Ye 're perfectly richt.'

'Ay, then,' continued the stonebreaker, 'when Miltiades saw the cocks at it wi' all their micht, he stopped the army and addressed it. "Behold!" he cried, at the top of his voice, "these cocks do not fight for their household gods, nor for the monuments of their ancestors, nor for glory, nor for liberty, nor for their children, but only because one will not give way unto the other."'

‘ It was nobly said,’ declared Hendry ; ‘ na, cocks wouldna hae sae muckle understandin’ as to fecht for thae things. I wouldna wonder but what it was some laddies ’at set them at ane another.’

‘ Hendry doesna see what Miltides was after,’ said T’nowhead.

‘ Ye ’ve ta’en ’t up wrang, Hendry,’ Tammas explained. ‘ What Miltiades meant was ’at if cocks could fecht sae weel oot o’ mere deviltry, surely the Greeks would fecht terrible for their gods an’ their bairns an’ the other things.’

‘ I see, I see ; but what was the monuments o’ their ancestors ? ’

‘ Ou, that was the gravestanes they put up i’ their kirkyards.’

‘ I wonder the other billies would want to tak them awa. They would be a mighty wecht.’

‘ Ay, but they wanted them, an’ nat’rally the Greeks stuck to the stanes they paid for.’

‘ So, so, an’ did Davit Lunan mak oot ’at there was humour in that ? ’

‘ He did so. He said it was a humorous thing to think o’ a hale army lookin’ on at twa cocks fechtin'. I assure ye I telt 'im 'at I saw nae humour in 't. It was ene o' the most impressive sights ever seen by man, an' the Greeks was sae inspired by what Miltiades said 'at they sweepit the Persians oot o' their country.'

We all agreed that Tammas's was the genuine humour.

'An' an enviable possess on it is,' said Hendry.

'In a wy,' admitted Tammas, 'but no in a' wys.'

He hesitated, and then added in a low voice—

'As sure as death, Hendry, it sometimes taks grip o' me i' the kirk itsel, an' I can hardly keep frae lauchin'.'

CHAPTER VI

DEAD THIS TWENTY YEARS

IN the lustiness of youth there are many who cannot feel that they, too, will die. The first fear stops the heart. Even then they would keep death at arm's length by making believe to disown him. Loved ones are taken away, and the boy, the girl, will not speak of them, as if that made the conqueror's triumph the less. In time the fire in the breast burns low, and then, in the last glow of the embers, it is sweeter to hold to what has been than to think of what may be.

Twenty years had passed since Joey ran down the brae to play. Jess, his mother, shook her staff fondly at him. A cart rumbled by, the driver nodding on the shaft. It rounded the corner and stopped suddenly, and then a woman screamed. A handful of men carried Joey's dead body to his mother, and that was the tragedy of Jess's life.

Twenty years ago, and still Jess sat at the window, and still she heard that woman scream. Every other living being had forgotten Joey; even to Hendry he was now scarcely a name, but there were times when Jess's face quivered and her old arms went out for her dead boy.

'God's will be done,' she said, 'but oh, I grudged Him my bairn terrible sair. I dinna want him back noo, and ilka day is takkin me nearer him, but for mony a lang year I grudged him sair, sair. He was juist five minutes gone, an' they brocht him back deid, my Joey.'

On the Sabbath day Jess could not go to church, and it was then, I think, that she was with Joey most. There was often a blessed serenity on her face when we returned, that only comes to those who have risen from their knees with their prayers answered. Then she was very close to the boy who died. Long ago she could not look out from her window upon the brae, but now it was her seat in church. There on the Sabbath evenings she sometimes talked to me of Joey.

'It's been a fine day,' she would say, 'juist like that day. I thank the Lord for the sunshine noo, but oh, I thocht at the time I couldna look at the sun shinin' again.'

'In all Thrums,' she has told me, and I know it to be true, 'there's no a better man than Hendry. There's them 'at's cleverer in the ways o' the world, but my man, Hendry McQumpha, never did naething in all his life 'at wasna weel intended, an' though his words is common, it's to the Lord he looks. I canna think but what Hendry's pleasin' to God. Oh, I dinna ken what to say wi' thankfulness to Him when I mind hoo good he's been to me. There's Leeby 'at I couldna hae done withoot, me bein' sae silly (weak bodily), an' aye Leeby's stuck by me an' gien up her life, as ye micht say, for me. Jamie——'

But then Jess sometimes broke down.

'He's so far awa,' she said, after a time, 'an' aye when he gangs back to London after his holidays he has a fear he'll never see me again, but he's terrified to mention it, an' I juist ken by the wy he taks haud o' me, an' comes runnin' back to tak haud o' me again. I ken fine what he 's thinkin', but I daurna speak.

' Guid is no word for what Jamie has been to me, but he wasna born till a ter Joey died. When we got Jamie, Hendry took to whistlin' again at the loom, and Jamie juist filled Joey's place to him. Ay, but naebody could fill Joey's place to me. It's different o a man. A bairn's no the same to him, but a fell bit o' me was buried in my laddie's grave.

' Jamie an' Joey was never nane the same nature. It was aye something in a shop Jamie wanted to be, an' he never cared muckle for his books, but Joey hankered after being a minister, young as he was, an' a minister Hendry an' me would hae done our best to mak him. Mony, mony a time after he came in frae the kirk on the Sabbath he would stand up at this very window and wave his hands in a reverent way, juist like the minister. His first text was to be "Thou God seest me."

' Ye'll wonder at me, but I've sat here in the lang fore-nichts dreamin' 'at Joey was a grown man noo, an' 'at I was puttin' on my bonnet to come to the kirk to hear him preach. Even as far back as twenty years an' mair I wasna able to gang aboot, but Joey would say to me, " We 'll get a carriage to ye, mother, so 'at ye can come and hear me preach on 'Thou God seest me.' " He would say to me, " It doesna do, mother, for the minister in the pulpit to nod to ony o' the fowk, but I 'll gie ye a look an' ye 'll ken it 's me." Oh, Joey, I would hae gien you a look too, an' ye would hae kent what I was thinkin'. He often said, " Ye 'll be proud o' me, will ye no, mother, when ye see me comin' sailin' alang to the pulpit in my gown ? " So I would hae been proud o' him, an' I was proud to hear him speakin' o't. " The other fowk," he said, " will be sittin' in their seats wonderin' what my text 's to be, but you 'll ken, mother, an' you 'll turn up to 'Thou God seest me' afore I gie oot the chapter." Ay, but that day he was coffined, for all the minister prayed, I found it hard to say " Thou God seest me." It 's the text I like best noo, though, an' when Hendry an' Leeby is at the kirk I turn 't up often, often in the Bible. I read frae the beginnin' o' the chapter, but when I come to "Thou God seest me," I stop. Na, it's no at there's ony rebellion to the Lord in my heart noo, for I ken He was lookin' doon when the cart gaed ower Joey, an' He wanted to tak my laddie to Himself. But juist when I come to "Thou God seest me," I let the Book lie in my lap, for aince a body's sure o' that they're sure o' all. Ay, ye'll laugh, but I think, mebbe juist because I was his mother, 'at though Joey never lived to preach in a kirk, he's preached frae "Thou God seest me" to me. I dinna ken 'at I would ever hae been sae sure o' that if it hadna been for him, an' so I think I see him sailin' doon to the pulpit juist as he said he would do. I seen him gi'en me the look he spoke o'—ay, he looks my wy first, an' I ken it's him. Naebody sees him but me, but I see him gi'en me the look he promised. He's so terrible near me, an' him dead, 'at when my time comes I'll be rale willin' to go. I dinna say that to Jamie, because he all trembles; but I'm auld noo, an' I'm no nane loth to gang.'

Jess's staff probably had a history before it became hers, for, as known to me, it was always old and black. If we studied them sufficiently we might discover that staves age perceptibly just as the hair turns grey. At the risk of being thought fanciful I dare to say that in inanimate objects, as in ourselves, there is honourable and shameful old age, and that to me Jess's staff was a symbol of the good, the true. It rested against her in the window, and she was so helpless without it when on her feet, that to those who saw much of her it was part of herself. The staff was very short, nearly a foot having been cut, as I think she once told me herself, from the original, of which to make a porridge thieval (or stick with which to stir porridge), and in moving Jess leant heavily on it. Had she stood erect it would not have touched the floor. This was the staff that Jess shook so playfully at her boy the forenoon in May when he ran out to his death. Joey, however, was associated in Jess's memory with her staff in less painful ways. When she spoke of him she took the dwarf of a staff in her hands and looked at it softly.

‘ It ’s hard to me,’ she would say, ‘ to believe ’at twa an’ twenty years hae come and gone since the nicht Joey hod (hid) my staff. Ay, but Hendry was straucht in tha days by what he is noo, an’ Jamie wasna born. Twa an’ twenty years come the back end o’ the year, an’ it wasna thocht ’at I could lve through the winter. “ Ye’ll no last mair than anither month, Jess,” was what my sister Bell said when she came to see me, and yet here I am aye sittin’ at my window, an’ Bell’s been i’ the kirkyard this dozen years.

‘ Leeby was saxteen month younger than Joey, an’ mair quiet like. Her heart was juist set on helpin’ about the hoose, an’ though she was but fower year auld she could kindle the fire an’ redd up (clean up) the room. Leeby’s been my savin’ ever since she was fower year auld. Ay, but it was Joey ’at hung aboot me maist, an’ he took notice ’at I wasna gaen out as I used to do. Since sune after my marriage I’ve needed the stick, but there was days ’at I could gang across the road an’ sit on a stane. Joey kent there was something wrang when I had to gie that up, an' syne he noticed 'at I couldna even gang to the window unless Hendry kind o' carried me. Na, ye wouldna think 'at there could hae been days when Hendry did that, but he did. He was a sort o' ashamed if ony o' the neighbours saw him so affectionate like, but he was terrible ta'en up aboot me. His loom was doon at T'nowhead's Bell's father's, an' often he cam awa up to see if I was ony better. He didna lat on to the other weavers 'at he was comin' to see what like I was. Na, he juist said he'd forgotten a pirn, or his cruizey lamp, or onything. Ah, but he didna mak nae pretence o' no carin' for me aince he was inside the hoose. He came crawlin' to the bed no to wauken me if I was sleepin', an' mony a time I made belief 'at I was, juist to please him. It was an awfu' business on him to hae a young wife sae helpless, but he wasna the man to cast that at me. I mind o' sayin' to him one day in my bed, "Ye made a poor bargain, Hendry, when ye took me." But he says, "Not one soul in Thrums'll daur say that to me but yersel, Jess. Na, na, my dawty, you 're the wuman o' my choice ; there 's juist one wuman i' the warld to me, an' that 's you, my ain Jess." Twa an' twen'y years syne. Ay, Hendry called me fond like names, thae no everyday names. What a straucht man he was !

' The doctor had said he could do no more for me, an' Hendry was the only a'e 'at didna gie me up. The bairns, of course, didna understan', an' Joey would come into the bed an' play on the top o' me. Hendry would hae ta'en him awa, but I liked to hae 'im. Ye see, we was lang married afore we had a bairn, an' though I couldna bear ony other weight on me, Joey didna hurt me, somehoo. I liked to hae 'im so close to me.

' It was through that 'at he came to bury my staff. I couldna help often thinkin' o' what like the hoose would be when I was gone, an' about Leeby and Joey left so young. So, when I could say it without greetin', I said to Joey 'at I was goin' far awa, an' would he be a terrible guid laddie to his father and Leeby when I was gone ? He aye juist said, " Dinna gang, mother, dinna gang," but one day Hendry came in from his loom, and says Joey, " Father, whaur's my mother gaun to, awa frae us ? " I'll never forget Hendry's face. His mouth juist opened an' shut twa or three times, an he walked quick ben to the room. I cried oot to him to come back, but he didna come, so I sent Joey for him. Joey came runnin' back to me sayin', " Mother, mother, a'm awfu' fleid (frightened), for my father's greetin' sair."

' A' thae things took a haud o' Joey, an' he ended in gi'en us a fleg (fright). I was sleepin' ill at the time, an' Hendry was ben sleepin' in the room wi' Leeby, Joey bein' wi' me. Ay, weel, one nicht I woke up in the dark an' put oot my hand to 'im, an' he wasna there. I sat up wi' a terrible start, an' syne I kent by the cauld 'at the door maun be open. I cried oot quickly to Hendry, but he was a soond sleeper, an' he didna hear me. Ay, I dinna ken hoo I did it, but I got ben to the room and shook him up. I was near daft wi' fear when I saw Leeby wasna there either Hendry couldna tak it a' in at aince, but sune he had his trousers on, an' he made me lie down on his bed. He said he wouldna move till I did it, or I wouldna hae dune it. As sune as he was coot o' the hoose crying their names I sat up in my bed listenin'. Sune I heard speakin', an' in a minute Leeby comes runnin' in to me roarin' an' greetin'. She was barefeeted, and had juist her nightgown on, an' her teeth was chat erin'. I took her into the bed, but it was an hour afore she could tell me onything, she was in sic a state.

'Sune after Hendry came in carrying Joey. Joey was as naked as Leeby, and as cauld as lead, but he wasna greetin'. Instead o' that he was awfu' satisfied like, and for all Hendry threatened to lick him he wouldna tell what he an' Leeby had been doin'. He says, though, says he, "Ye'll no gang awa noo, mother; no, ye'll bide noo." My bonnie laddie, I didna fathom him at the time.

'It was Leeby 'at I got it frae. Ye see, Joey had never seen me gaen ony gait withoot my staff, an' he thocht if he hod it I wouldna be able to gang awa. Ay, he planned it all oot, though he was but a bairn, an' lay watching me in my bed till I fell asleep. Syne he creepit oot o' the bed, an' got the staff, and gaed ben for Leeby. She was fleid, but he said it was the only wy to mak 'at I couldna gang awa. It was juist ower there whaur thae cabbages is 'at he dug the hole wi' a spade, an' buried the staff. Hendry dug it up next mornin'.'

CHAPTER VII

THE STATEMENT OF TIBBIE BIRSE

ON a Thursday Pete Lownie was buried, and when Hendry returned from the funeral Jess asked if Davit Lunan had been there.

‘Na,’ said Hendry, who was shut up in the closet-bed, taking off his blacks, ‘I heard tell he wasna bidden.’

‘Yea, yea,’ said Jess, nodding to me significantly. ‘Ay, weel,’ she added, ‘we’ll be ha’en Tibbie ower here on Saturday to deve’s (weary us) to death aboot it.’

Tibbie, Davit’s wife, was sister to Marget, Pete’s widow, and she generally did visit Jess on Saturday night to talk about Marget, who was fast becoming one of the most fashionable persons in Thrums. Tibbie was hopelessly plebeian. She was none of your proud kind, and if I entered the kitchen when she was there she pretended not to see me, so that, if I chose,

I might escape without speaking to the like of her. I always grabbed her hand, however, in a frank way.

On Saturday Tibbie made her appearance. From the rapidity of her walk, and the way she was sucking in her mouth, I knew that she had strange things to unfold. She had pinned a grey shawl about her shoulders, and wore a black mutch over her dangling grey curls.

'It's you, Tibbie,' I heard Jess say, as the door opened.

Tibbie did not knock, not considering herself grand enough for ceremony, and indeed Jess would have resented her knocking. On the other hand, when Leeby visited Tibbie, she knocked as politely as if she was collecting for the precentor's present. All this showed that we were superior socially to Tibbie.

'Ay, hoo are ye, Jess?' Tibbie said.

'Muckle about it,' answered Jess; 'juist aff an' on; ay, an' hoo hae ye been yersel?'

'Ou,' said Tibbie.

I wish I could write 'ou' as Tibbie said it. With her it was usually a sentence in itself.

Sometimes it was a mere bark, again it expressed indignation, surprise, rapture; it might be a check upon emotion or a way of leading up to it, and often it lasted for half a minute. In this instance it was, I should say an intimation that if Jess was ready Tibbie would begin.

‘So Pete Lownie’s gone,’ said Jess, whom I could not see from ben the house. I had a good glimpse of Tibbie, however, through the open doorways. She had the arm-chair on the south side, as she would have said, of the fireplace.

‘He’s awa,’ assented Tibbie primly.

I heard the lid of the kettle dancing, and then came a prolonged ‘ou.’ Tibbie bent forward to whisper, and if she had anything terrible to tell I was glad of that, for when she whispered I heard her best. For a time only a murmur of words reached me, distant music with an ‘ou’ now and again that fired Tibbie as the beating of his drum may rouse the martial spirit of a drummer. At last our visitor broke into an agitated whisper, and it was only when she stopped whispering, as she did now and again, that I ceased to hear her. Jess evidently put a question at times, but so politely (for she had on her best wrapper) that I did not catch a word.

‘ Though I should be struck deid this nicht,’ Tibbie whispered, and the sibilants hissed between her few remaining teeth, ‘ I wasna sae muckle as speired to the layin’ oot. There was Mysy Cruickshanks there, an’ Kitty Wobster ’at was nae friends to the corpse to speak o’, but Marget passed by me, me ’at is her ain flesh an’ blood, though it mayna be for the like o’ me to say it. It’s gospel truth, Jess, I tell ye, when I say ’at, for all I ken officially, as ye might say, Pete Lownie may be weel and hearty this day. If I was to meet Marget in the face I couldna say he was deid, though I ken ’at the wricht coffined him ; na, an’ what ’s mair, I wouldna gie Marget the satisfaction o’ hearin’ me say it. No, Jess, I tell ye, I dinna pertend to be on an equality wi’ Marget, but equality or no equality, a body has her feelings, an’ lat on ’at I ken Pete’s gone I will not. Eh ? Ou weel . . .

‘ Na faags a ; na, na. I ken my place better than to gang near Marget. I dinna deny ’at she’s grand by me, and her keeps a bakechoose o' her ain, an' glad am I to see her doin' sae weel, but let me tell ye this, Jess, "Pride goeth before a fall." Yes, it does, it's Scripture. And this I will say, though ken in my place, 'at Davit Lunan is as dainty a man as is in Thrums, an' there's no one 'at's better behaved at a bural, being particularly wise-like (presentable) in 's blacks, an' them splat new. Na, na, Jess, Davit may hae his faults an' tak a dram at times like anither, but he would shame naebody at a bural, an' Marget delecberately insulted him, no speirin' him to Pete's. What's mair, when the minister cried in to see me yesterday, an' me on the floor washin', says he, "So Marget's lost her man," an' I said, "Say ye so, na?" for let on 'at I kent, and neither me at the layin' oot nor Davit Lunan at the funeral, I would not.

"David should hae gone to the funeral," says the minister, "for I doubt not he was only omitted in the invitations by a mistake."

'Ay, it was weel meant, but says I, Jess, says I, "As lang as a'm livin' to tak charge o' 'im, Davit Lunan gangs to nae burals 'at he's no bidden to. An' I tell ye," I says to the minister, "if there was one body 'at had a richt to be at the bural o' Pete Lownie, it was Davit Lunan, him bein' my man an' Marget my ain sister. Yes," says I, though a'm no o' the boastin' kind, "Davit had maist richt to be there next to Pete 'imself." Ou, Jess . . .

'This is no a maiter I like to speak about; na, I dinna care to mention it, but the neighbours is nat'rally ta'en up about it, and Chirsty Tosh was sayin' what I would wager 'at Marget hadna sent the minister to hint 'at Davit's bein' overlookit in the invitations was juist an accident? Losh, losh, Jess, to think 'at a woman could hae the mighty assurance to mak a tool o' the very minister! But, sal, as far as that gangs, Marget would do it, an' gae twice to the kirk next Sabbath, too; but if she thinks she's to get ower me like that, she taks me for a bigger fule than I tak her for. Na, na, Marget, ye dinna draw my leg (deceive me). Ou, no . . .

'Mind ye, Jess, I hae no desire to be friends wi' Marget. Naething could be farrer frae my wish than to hae helpit in the layin' oot o'

Pete Lownie, an', I assure ye, Davit wasna keen to gang to the bural. "If they dinna want me to their burals," Davit says, "they hae nae mair to do than to say sae. But I warn ye, Tibbie," he says, "if there's a bural frae this hoose, be it your bural, or be it my bural, not one o' the family o' Lownies casts their shadows upon the corp." Thae was the very words Davit said to me as we watched the hearse frae the skylight. Ay, he bore up wonderfu' but he felt it, Jess—he felt it, as I could tell by his takkin to drink again that very nicht. Jess, Jess . . .

'Marget's gettin' waur and waur? Ay, ye may say so, though I'll say naething agin her mysel. Of coorse a'm no on equality wi' her, especially since she had the bell put up in her hoose. Ou, I hinna seen it mysel, na, I never gang near the hoose, an', as mony a body can tell ye, when I do hae to gang that wy I mak my feet my friend. Ay, but as I was sayin', Marget's sac grand noo 'at she has a bell in the hoose. As I understan', there's a rope in the wast room, an' when ye pu' it a bell rings in the east room. Weel, when Marget has company at their tea in the wast room, an' they need mair watter or scones or onything, she rises an' rings the bell. Syne Jean, the auldest lassie, gets up frae the table an' lifts the jug or the plates an' gaes awa ben to the east room for what's wanted. Ay, it's a wy o' doin' it juist like the gentry, but I'll tell ye, Jess, Pete juist fair hated the soond o' that bell, and there's them 'at says it was the death o' 'im. To think o' Marget ha'en sic an establishment! . . .

'Na, I hinna seen the mournin', I've heard o't. Na, if Marget doesna tell me naething, a'm no the kind to speir naething, and though I'll be at the kirk the morn, I winna turn my heid to look at the mournin'. But it's fac as death I ken frae Janet McQuhatty 'at the bonnet's a' crape, an' three yairds o' crape on the dress, the which Marget calls a costume. . . . Ay, I wouldna wonder but what it was hale watter the morn, for it looks mighty like rain, an' if it is it'll serve Marget richt, an' mebbe bring doon her pride a wee. No 'at I want to see her humbled, for, in coorse, she's grand by the like o' me. Ou, but . . .'

CHAPTER VIII

A CLOAK WITH BEADS

ON weekdays the women who passed the window were meagrely dressed ; mothers in draggled winsey gowns, carrying infants that were armfuls of grandeur. The Sabbath clothed every one in her best, and then the women went by with their hands spread out. When I was with Hendry cloaks with beads were the fashion, and Jess sighed as she looked at them. They were known in Thrums as the Eleven and a Bits (threepenny bits), that being their price at Kyowowy's in the square. Kyowowy means finicky, and applied to the draper by general consent. No doubt it was very characteristic to call the cloaks by their market value. In the glen my scholars still talk of their school-books as the tupenny, the fowerpenny, the saxpenny. They finish their education with the tenpenny.

Jess's opportunity for handling the garments that others of her sex could finger in shops was when she had guests to tea. Persons who merely dropped in and remained to tea got their meal, as a rule, in the kitchen. They had nothing on that Jess could not easily take in as she talked to them. But when they came by special invitation, the meal was served in the room, the guest's things being left on the kitchen bed. Jess, not being able to go ben the house, had to be left with the things. When the time to go arrived, these were found on the bed, just as they had been placed there, but Jess could now tell Leeby whether they were imitation, why Bell Elshioner's feather went far round the bonnet, and Chirsty Lownie's reason for always holding her left arm fast against her side when she went abroad in the black jacket. Ever since My Hobart's eleven and a bit was left on the kitchen bed Jess had hungered for a cloak with beads. My's was the very marrows of the one T'nowhead's wife got in Dundee for ten and sixpence; indeed, we would have thought that Lisbeth's also came from Kyo-wow's had not Sanders Elshioner's sister seen her go into the Dundee shop with T'nowhead (who was loth), and hung about to discover what she was after.

Hendry was not quick at reading faces like Tammag Haggart, but the wistful look on Jess's face when there was talk of eleven and a bits had its meaning for him.

'They're grand to look at, no doubt,' I have heard him say to Jess, 'but they're richt annoyin'. That new wife o' Peter Dickie's had ane on in the kirk last Sabbath, an' wi' her sittin' juist afore us I couldna listen to the sermon for tryin' to count the beads.'

Hendry made his way into these gossips uninvited, for his opinions on dress were considered contemptible, though he was worth consulting on material. Jess and Leebie discussed many things in his presence, confident that his ears were not doing their work; but every now and then it was discovered that he had been hearkening greedily. If the subject was dress, he might then become a little irritating.

‘ Oh, they ’re grand,’ Jess admitted ; ‘ they set a body aff oncommon.’

‘ They would be no use to you,’ said Hendry, ‘ for ye canna wear them except ootside.’

‘ A body doesna buy cloaks to be wearin’ at them steady,’ retorted Jess.

‘ No, no, but you could never wear yours though ye had ane.’

‘ I dinna want ane. They ’re far ower grand for the like o’ me.’

‘ They ’re no nae sic thing. A’m thinkin’ ye ’re juist as fit to wear an eleven and a bit as My Hobart.’

‘ Weel, mebbe I am, but it ’s oot o’ the queis- tion gettin’ ane, they ’re sic a price.’

‘ Ay, an’ though we had the siller, it would surely be an awfu’ like thing to buy a cloak ’at ye could never wear ? ’

‘ Ou, but I dinna want ane.’

Jess spoke so mournfully that Hendry became enraged.

‘ It ’s most mighty,’ he said, ‘ ’at ye would gang an’ set yer heart on sic a completely useless thing.’

‘ I hinna set my heart on ’t.’

‘ Dinna blether. Ye ’ve been speakin’ aboot thae eleven and a bits to Leebie, aff an’ on, for twa month.’

Then Hendry hobbled off to his loom, and Jess gave me a look which meant the men are trying at the best, once you are tied to them.

The cloaks continued to turn up in conversation, and Hendry poured scorn upon Jess’s weakness, telling her she would be better employed mending his trousers than brooding over an eleven and a bit that would have to spend its life in a drawer. An outsider would have thought that Hendry was positively cruel to Jess. He seemed to take a delight in finding that she had neglected to sew a button on his waistcoat. His real joy, however, was the knowledge that she sewed as no other woman in Thrums could sew. Jess had a genius for making new garments out of old ones, and Hendry never tired of gloating over her cleverness so long as she was not present. He was always athirst for fresh proofs of it, and these were forthcoming every day. Sparing were his words of praise to herself, but in the evening he generally had a smoke with me in the attic, and then the thought of Jess made him chuckle till his pipe went out. When he smoked he grunted as if in pain, though this really added to the enjoyment.

‘It doesna matter,’ he would say to me, ‘what Jess turns her hand to, she can mak ony mortal thing. She doesna need nae teachin’; na, juist gie her a good look at onything, be it clothes, or furniture, or in the bakin’ line, it’s all the same to her. She’ll mak another exactly like it. Ye canna beat her. Her bannocks is so superior ’at a Tilliedrum woman took to her bed after tastin’ them, an’ when the lawyer has company his wife gets Jess to mak some bannocks for her an’ syne pretends they’re her ain bakin’. Ay, there’s a story aboot that. One day the auld doctor, him ’at’s deid, was at his tea at the lawyer’s, an’ says the guid-wife, “Try the cakes, Mr. Riach; they’re my own bakin’.” Weel, he was a fearsomely outspoken man, the doctor, an’ nae suner had he the bannock atween his teeth, for he didna stop to swallow 't, than he says, " Mis'ress Geddie," says he, " I wasna born on a Sabl ath. Na, na, you 're not the first grand leddy 'at has gien me bannocks as their ain bakin' at was baked and fired by Jess Logan, her at's Hendry McQumpha's wife." Ay, they sa' the lawyer's wife didna ken which way to look she was that mortified. It's juist the same wi' sewin'. There's wys o' ornamentin' christenin' robes an' the like 'at's kent to naebody but hersel; an' as for stockin's, weel, though I've seen her mak sae mony, she amazes me yet. I mind o' a furry waistcoat I aince had. Weel, when it was fell dune, do you think she gae it awa to some gaen about body (vagrant)? Na, she made it into a rich neat coat to Jamie, wha was a bit laddie at the time. When he grew out o' it, she made a slipbody o't for hersel. Ay, I dinna ken a' the different things it became, but the last time I saw it was ben in the room, whaur she'd covered a footstool wi't. Yes, Jess is the cleverest crittur I ever saw. Leeby's handy, but she's no patch on her mother.'

I sometimes repeated these panegyrics to Jess.

She merely smiled, and said that men haver most terrible when they are not at their work.

Hendry tried Jess sorely over the cloaks, and a time came when, only by exasperating her, could he get her to reply to his sallies.

‘Wha wants an eleven and a bit?’ she retorted now and again.

‘It’s you ’at wants it,’ said Hendry promptly.

‘Did I ever say I wanted ane? What use could I hae for ’t?’

‘That’s the queiston,’ said Hendry. ‘Ye canna gang the length o’ the door, so ye would never be able to wear ’t.’

‘Ay, weel,’ replied Jess, ‘I’ll never hae the chance o’ no bein’ able to wear ’t, for, hooever muckle I wanted it, I couldna get it.’

Jess’s infatuation had in time the effect of making Hendry uncomfortable. In the attic he delivered himself of such sentiments as these :

‘There’s nae understandin’ a woman. There’s Jess, ’at hasna her equal for cleverness in Thrums, man or woman, an’ yet she’s fair skeered about thae cloaks. Aince a woman sets her mind on something to wear she's mair onreasonable than the stupidest man. Ay, it might mak them humble to see how foolish they are syne. No, but it doesna do 't.

'If it was a thing to be useful noo, I wouldna think the same o't, but she could never wear 't. She kens she could never wear 't, an' yet she's juist as keen to hae 't.

'I dinna like to see her so wantin' a thing, an' no able to get it. But it's an awfu' sum, eleven an' a bit.'

He tried to argue with her further.

'If ye had eleven an' a bit to fling awa,' he said, 'ye dinna mean to tell me 'at ye would buy a cloak instead o' cloth for a gown, or flannel for petticoats, or some useful thing?'

'As sure as death,' said Jess, with unwonted vehemence, 'if a cloak I could get, a cloak I would buy.'

Hendry came up to tell me what Jess had said.

'It's a mighty infatooation,' he said, 'but it shows hoo her heart's set on thae cloaks.'

‘Aince ye had it,’ he argued with her, ‘ye would juist hae to lock it awa in the drawers. Ye would never even be seein’ ’t.’

‘Ay, would I,’ said Jess. ‘I would often tak it oot an’ look at it. Ay, an’ I would aye ken it was there.’

‘But naebody would ken ye had it but yersel,’ said Hendry, who had a vague notion that this was a telling objection.

‘Would they no?’ answered Jess. ‘It would be a’ through the toon afore nicht.’

‘Weel, all I can say,’ said Hendry, ‘is ’at ye’re terrible foolish to tak the want o’ sic a useless thing to heart.’

‘A’m no takkin ’t to heart,’ retorted Jess, as usual.

Jess needed many things in her days that poverty kept from her to the end, and the cloak was merely a luxury. She would soon have let it slip by as something unattainable had not Hendry encouraged it to rankle in her mind. I cannot say when he first determined that Jess should have a cloak, come the money as it liked, for he was too ashamed of his weakness to admit his project to me. I remember, however, his saying to Jess one day :

‘ I ’ll warrant ye could mak a cl ak yersel the marrows o’ thae eleven and a bit-, at half the price ? ’

‘ It would cost,’ said Jess, ‘ sax an’ saxpence, exactly. The cloth would be five shillin’s, an’ the beads a shillin’. I have some braid ’at would do fine for the front, but the buttons would be saxpence.’

‘ Ye ’re sure o’ that ? ’

‘ I ken fine, for I got Leeby to price the things in the shop.’

‘ Ay, but it maun be ill to shape the cloaks richt. There was a queer cut aboot that ane Peter Dickie’s new wife had on.’

‘ Queer cut or no queer cut,’ said Jess, ‘ I took the shape o’ My Hobart’s ane the day she was here at her tea, an’ I could mak the identical o’t for sax and sax.’

‘ I dinna believe ’t,’ said Hendry, but when he and I were alone he told me, ‘ There ’s no a doubt she could mak it. Ye heard her say she had ta'en the shape? Ay, that shows she's rale set on a cloak.'

Had Jess known that Hendry had been saving up for months to buy her material for a cloak, she would not have let him do it. She could not know, however, for all the time he was scraping together his pence, he kept up a ring-ding-dang about her folly. Hendry gave Jess all the wages he weaved, except threepence weekly, most of which went in tobacco and snuff. The dulseman had perhaps a halfpenny from him in the fortnight. I noticed that for a long time Hendry neither smoked nor snuffed, and I knew that for years he had carried a shilling in his snuff-mull. The remainder of the money he must have made by extra work at his loom, by working harder, for he could scarcely have worked longer.

It was one day shortly before Jamie's return to Thrums that Jess saw Hendry pass the house, and go down the brae when he ought to have come in to his brose. She sat at the window watching for him, and by and by he reappeared, carrying a parcel.

‘ Whaur on earth hae ye been ’ she asked,
‘ an’ what ’s that you ’re carryin’ ’

‘ Did ye think it was an eleveer an’ a bit ? ’ said Hendry.

‘ No, I didna,’ answered Jess indignantly.

Then Hendry slowly undid the knots of the string with which the parcel was tied. He took off the brown paper.

‘ There ’s yer cloth,’ he said, ‘ an’ here ’s one an’ saxpence for the beads an’ the buttons.’

While Jess still stared he followed me ben the house.

‘ It ’s a terrible haver,’ he said apologetically, but she had set her heart on ’t.’

CHAPTER IX

THE POWER OF BEAUTY

ONE evening there was such a gathering at the pigsty that Hendry and I could not get a board to lay our backs against. Circumstances had pushed Pete Elshioner into the place of honour that belonged by right of mental powers to Tammag Haggart, and Tammag was sitting rather sullenly on the bucket, boring a hole in the pig with his sarcastic eye. Pete was passing round a card, and in time it reached me. 'With Mr. and Mrs. David Alexander's compliments' was printed on it, and Pete leered triumphantly at us as it went round.

'Weel, what think ye?' he asked, with a pretence at modesty.

'Ou,' said T'nowhead, looking at the others like one who asked a question, 'ou, I think; ay, ay.'

The others seemed to agree with him, all but Tammas, who did not care to tie himself down to an opinion.

‘Ou, ay,’ T’nowhead continued, more confidently, ‘it is so, deceededly.’

‘Ye ’ll no ken,’ said Pete, chuckling, ‘what it means.’

‘Na,’ the farmer admitted, ‘na, I canna say I exac’ly ken that.’

‘I ken, though,’ said Tammas, in his keen way.

‘Weel, then, what is ’t?’ demanded Pete, who had never properly come under Tammas’s spell.

‘I ken,’ said Tammas.

‘Oot wi ’t, then.’

‘I dinna say it ’s lyin’ on my tongue,’ Tammas replied in a tone of reproof, ‘but if ye ’ll juist speak awa aboot some other thing for a meenute or twa, I ’ll tell ye syne.’

Hendry said that this was only reasonable, but we could think of no subject at the moment, so we only stared at Tammas, and waited.

‘I fathomed it,’ he said at last, ‘as sune as my een lichted on ’t. It ’s one o’ the bit cards ’at grand fowk slip aneath doors when they mak calls, an' their friends is no in. Ay, that's what it is.'

'I dinna say ye're wrang,' Pete answered, a little annoyed. 'Ay, weel, lads, of course David Alexander's oor Dite as we called 'im, Dite Elshioner, and that's his wy o' signifyin' to us 'at he's married.'

'I assure ye,' said Hendry, 'Dite's doin' the thing in style.'

'Ay, we said that when the card arrived,' Pete admitted.

'I kent,' said Tammas, 'at that was the way grand fowk did when they got married. I've kent it a lang time. It's nae surprise to me.'

'He's been lang in marryin',' Hookey Crewe said.

'He was thirty at Martinmas,' said Pete.

'Thirty, was he?' said Hookey. 'Man, I'd buried twa wives by the time I was that age, an' was castin' aboot for a third.'

'I mind o' them,' Hendry interposed.

'Ay,' Hookey said, 'the first twa was angels.' Here he paused. 'An' so's the third,' he added, 'in many respects.'

‘But wha’s the woman Dite’s ta’en?’
T’nowhead or some one of the more silent members of the company asked of Pete.

‘Ou, we dinna ken wha she is,’ answered Pete; ‘but she’ll be some Glasgow lassie, for he’s there noo. Look, lads, look at this. He sent this at the same time; it’s her picture.’
Pete produced the silhouette of a young lady, and handed it round.

‘What do ye think?’ he asked.

‘I assure ye!’ said Hookey.

‘Sal,’ said Hendry, even more charmed,
‘Dite’s done weel.’

‘Lat’s see her in a better licht,’ said Tammas.

He stood up and examined the photograph narrowly, while Pete fidgeted with his legs.

‘Fairish,’ said Tammas at last. ‘Ou, ay; no what I would selec’ mysel, but a dainty bit stocky! Ou, a tasty crittury! ay, an’ she’s weel in order. Lads, she’s a fine stoot kimmer.’

‘I conseeder her a beauty,’ said Pete, aggressively.

‘She’s a’ that,’ said Hendry.

‘A’ I can say,’ said Hookey, ‘is ’at she taks me most mighty.’

‘She’s no a beauty,’ Tammas maintained; ‘na, she doesna juist come up to that; but I dinna deny but what she’s weel faured.’

‘What faut do ye find wi’ her, Tammas?’ asked Hendry.

‘Conseedered critically,’ said Tammas, holding the photograph at arm’s length, ‘I would say ’at she—let’s see, noo; ay, I would say ’at she’s defeecient in genteelity.’

‘Havers,’ said Pete.

‘Na,’ said Tammas, ‘no when conseedered critically. Ye see she’s drawn lauchin’; an’ the genteel thing’s no to lauch, but juist to put on a bit smirk. Ay, that’s the genteel thing.’

‘A smile, they ca’ it,’ interposed T’nowhead.

‘I said a smile,’ continued Tammas. ‘Then there’s her waist. I say naething agin her waist, speakin’ in the ord’nar meanin’; but, conseedered critically, there’s a want o’ suppleness, as ye might say, aboot it. Ay, it doesna compare wi’ the waist o’——’ (Here Tammas mentioned a young lady who had recently married into a local county family)

‘ That was a pretty tiddy,’ said Hookey. ‘ Ou, losh, ay ! it made me a kind o’ queery to look at her.’

‘ Ye ’re ower kyow-owy (particular), Tammas,’ said Pete.

‘ I may be, Pete,’ Tammas admitted ; ‘ but I maun say I ’m fond o’ a bonny-looken wuman, an’ no aisy to please : na, I ’m nat’rally ane o the critical kind.’

‘ It ’s extror’nar.’ said T’nowhead, ‘ what a poo’er beauty has. I mind when I was a callant readin’ aboot Mary Queen o’ Scots till I was fair mad, lads ; yes, I was fair mad at her bein’ deid. Ou, I could hardly sleep at nights for thinking o’ her.’

‘ Mary was spunky as weel as a beauty,’ said Hookey, ‘ an’ that ’s the kind I like. Lads, what a persuasive tid she was ! ’

‘ She got roond the men,’ said Hendry, ‘ ay, she turned them roond her finger. That ’s the warst o’ thae beauties.’

‘ I dinna gainsay,’ said T’nowhead, ‘ but what there was a little o' the deevil in Mary, the crittur.'

Here T'nowhead chuckled, and then looked scared.

'What Mary needed,' said Tammas, 'was a strong man to manage her.'

'Ay, man, but it 's ill to manage thae beauties. They gie ye a glint o' their een, an' syne whaur are ye?'

'Ah, they can be managed,' said Tammas complacently. 'There 's naebody nat'rally safter wi' a pretty stocky o' a bit wumany than mysel; but for a' that, if I had been Mary's man I would hae stood nane o' her tantrums. "Na, Mary, my lass," I would hae said, "this winna do; na, na, ye're a bonny body, but ye maun mind 'at man 's the superior; ay, man 's the lord o' creation, an' so ye maun juist sing sma'." That's hoo I would hae managed Mary, the speerity crittur 'at she was.'

'Ye would hae haen yer wark cut oot for ye, Tammas.'

'Ilka mornin',' pursued Tammas, 'I would hae said to her, "Mary," I would hae said, “wha’s to wear the breeks the day, you or me?” Ay, syne I would hae ordered her to kindle the fire, or if I had been the king, of coorse I would hae telt her instead to ring the bell an’ hae the cloth laid for the breakfast. Ay, that’s the way to mak th like o’ Mary respec’ ye.’

Pete and I left them talking. He had written a letter to David Alexander, and wanted me to ‘back’ it.

CHAPTER X

A MAGNUM OPUS

Two Bibles, a volume of sermons by the learned Dr. Isaac Barrow, a few numbers of the Cheap Magazine, that had strayed from Dunfermline, and a Pilgrim's Progress, were the works that lay conspicuous ben in the room. Hendry had also a copy of Burns, whom he always quoted in the complete poem, and a collection of legends in song and prose, that Leeby kept out of sight in a drawer.

The weight of my box of books was a subject Hendry was very willing to shake his head over, but he never showed any desire to take off the lid. Jess, however, was more curious ; indeed she would have been an omnivorous devourer of books had it not been for her conviction that reading was idling. Until I found her out she never allowed to me that Leeby brought her my books one at a time. Some of them were novels, and Jess took about ten minutes to each. She confessed that what she read was only the last chapter, owing to a consuming curiosity to know whether 'she got him.'

She read all the London part, however, of the Heart of Midlothian, because London was where Jamie lived, and she and I had a discussion about it which ended in her remembering that Thrums once had an author of its own.

'Bring oot the book,' she said to Leeby, 'it was put awa i' the bottom drawer ben i' the room sax year syne, an' I seipas it's there yet.'

Leeby came but with a faded little book, the title already rubbed from its shabby brown covers. I opened it, and then all at once I saw before me again the man who wrote and printed it and died. He came hobbling up the brae, so bent that his body was almost at right angles to his legs, and his broken silk hat was carefully brushed as in the days when Janet, his sister, lived. There he stood at the top of the brae, panting.

I was but a boy when Jimsy Duthie turned the corner of the brae for the last time, with a score of mourners behind him. While I knew him there was no Janet to run to the door to see if he was coming. So occupied was Jimsy with the great affair of his life, which was brewing for thirty years, that his neighbours saw how he missed his sister better than he realised it himself. Only his hat was no longer carefully brushed, and his coat hung awry, and there was sometimes little reason why he should go home to dinner. It is for the sake of Janet who adored him that we should remember Jimsy in the days before she died.

Jimsy was a poet, and for the space of thirty years he lived in a great epic on the Millennium. This is the book presented to me by Jess, that lies so quietly on my topmost shelf now. Open it, however, and you will find that the work is entitled The Millennium: an Epic Poem, in Twelve Books, by James Duthie. In the little hole in his wall where Jimsy kept his books there was, I have no doubt—for his effects were roused before I knew him except by name—a well-read copy of Paradise Lost. Some people would smile, perhaps, if they read the two epics side by side, and others might sigh, for there is a great deal in The Millennium that Milton could take credit for. Jimsy had educated himself, after the idea of writing something that the world would not willingly let die came to him, and he began his book before his education was complete. So far as I know, he never wrote a line that had not to do with The Millennium. He was ever a man sparing of his plural tenses, and The Millennium says 'has' for 'have'; a vain word, indeed, which Thrums would only have permitted as a poetical licence. The one original character in the poem is the devil, of whom Jimsy gives a picture that is startling and graphic, and received the approval of the Auld Licht minister.

By trade Jimsy was a printer, a master-printer with no one under him, and he printed and bound his book, ten copies in all, as well as wrote it. To print the poem took him, I dare say, nearly as long as to write it, and he set up the pages as they were written, one by one. The book is only printed on one side of the leaf, and each page was produced separately like a little hand-bill. Those who may pick up the book—but who will care to do so?—will think that the author or his printer could not spell—but they would not do Jimsy that injustice if they knew the circumstances in which it was produced. He had but a small stock of type, and on many occasions he ran out of a letter. The letter e tried him sorely. Those who knew him best say that he tried to think of words without an e in them, but when he was baffled he had to use a little a or an o instead. He could print correctly, but in the book there are a good many capital letters in the middle of words, and sometimes there is a note of interrogation after ‘alas’ or ‘Woe’s me,’ because all the notes of exclamation had been used up.

Jimsy never cared to speak about his great poem even to his closest friends, but Janet told how he read it out to her, and that his whole body trembled with excitement while he raised his eyes to heaven as if asking for inspiration that would enable his voice to do justice to his writing. So grand it was, said Janet, that her stocking would slip from her fingers as he read—and Janet's stockings, that she was always knitting when not otherwise engaged, did not slip from her hands readily. After her death he was heard by his neighbours reciting the poem to himself, generally with his door locked. He is said to have declaimed part of it one still evening from the top of the commonity like one addressing a multitude, and the idlers who had crept up to jeer at him fell back when they saw his face. He walked through them, they told, with his old body straight once more, and a queer light playing on his face. His lips are moving as I see him turning the corner of the brae. So he passed from youth to old age, and all his life seemed a dream, except that part of it in which he was writing or printing, or stitching or binding The Millennium. At last the work was completed.

‘It is finished,’ he printed at the end of the last book. ‘The task of thirty years is over.’

It is indeed over. No one ever read The Millennium. I am not going to sentimentalise over my copy, for how much of it have I read ?

But neither shall I say that it was written to no end.

You may care to know the last of Jimsy, though in one sense he was blotted out when the last copy was bound. He had saved one hundred pounds by that time, and being now neither able to work nor to live alone, his friends cast about for a home for his remaining years. He was very spent and feeble, yet he had the fear that he might be still alive when all his money was gone. After that was the workhouse. He covered sheets of paper with calculations about how long the hundred pounds would last if he gave away for board and lodgings ten shillings, nine shillings, seven and sixpence a week. At last, with sore misgivings, he went to live with a family who took him for eight shillings. Less than a month afterwards he died.

CHAPTER XI

THE GHOST CRADLE

OUR dinner-hour was twelve o'clock, and Hendry, for a not incomprehensible reason, called this meal his brose. Frequently, however, while I was there to share the expense, broth was put on the table, with beef to follow in clean plates. much to Hendry's distress, for the comfortable and usual practice was to eat the beef from the broth-plates. Jess, however, having three whole white plates and two cracked ones, insisted on the meals being taken genteelly, and her husband, with a look at me, gave way.

'Half a pound o' boiling beef an' a penny bone' was Leebby's almost invariable order when she dealt with the flesher, and Jess had always neighbours poorer than herself who got a plateful of the broth. She never had anything without remembering some old body who would be the better for a little of it.

Among those who must have missed Jess sadly after she was gone was Johnny Proctor, a half-witted man who, because he could not work, remained straight at a time of life when most weavers, male and female, had lost some inches of their stature. For as far back as my memory goes, Johnny had got his brose three times a week from Jess, his custom being to walk in without ceremony, and, drawing a stool to the table, tell Leebie that he was now ready. One day, however, when I was in the garden putting some rings on a fishing-wand, Johnny pushed by me, with no sign of recognition on his face. I addressed him, and, after pausing undecidedly, he ignored me. When he came to the door, instead of flinging it open and walking in, he knocked primly, which surprised me so much that I followed him.

‘Is this whaur Mistress McQumpha lives?’ he asked, when Leebie, with a face ready to receive the minister himself, came at length to the door.

I knew that the gentility of the knock had taken both her and her mother aback.

‘Hoots, Johnny,’ said Leeby, ‘what haver’s this? Come awa in.’

Johnny seemed annoyed.

‘Is this whaur Mistress McQuumpha lives?’ he repeated.

‘Say ’at it is,’ cried Jess, who was quicker in the uptake than her daughter.

‘Of course this is whaur Mistress McQuumpha lives,’ Leeby then said, ‘as weel ye ken, for ye had yer dinner here no twa hours syne.’

‘Then,’ said Johnny, ‘Mistress Tully’s compliments to her, and would she kindly lend the christenin’ robe, an’ also the tea-tray, if the same be na needed?’

Having delivered his message as instructed, Johnny consented to sit down until the famous christening robe and the tray were ready, but he would not talk, for that was not in the bond. Jess’s sweet face beamed over the compliment Mrs. Tully, known on ordinary occasions as Jean McTaggart, had paid her, and, after Johnny had departed laden, she told me how the tray, which had a great bump in the middle, came into her possession.

‘Ye’ve often heard me speak about the time when I was a lassie workin’ at the farm o’ the Bog? Ay, that was afore me and Hendry kent ane anither, an’ I was as fleet on my feet in thae days as Leeby is noo. It was Sam’l Fletcher ’at was the farmer, but he maun hae been gone afore you was mair than born. Mebbe, though, ye ken ’at he was a terrible invalid, an’ for the hinmost years o’ his life he sat in a muckle chair nicht an’ day. Ay, when I took his denner to ’im, on that very tray ’at Johnny cam for, I little thocht ’at by an’ by I would be sae keepit in a chair mysel.

‘But the thinkin’ o’ Sam’l Fletcher’s case is ane o’ the things ’at maks me awfu’ thankfu’ for the lenient way the Lord has aye dealt wi’ me; for Sam’l couldna move oot o’ the chair, aye sleepin’ in ’t at nicht, an’ I can come an’ gang between mine and my bed. Mebbe ye think I’m no much better off than Sam’l, but that’s a terrible mistak. What a glory it would hae been to him if he could hae gone frae one end o’ the kitchen to the ither. Ay, I’m sure o’ that.

‘ Sam’l was rale weel liked, fo’ he was saft-spoken to everybody, an’ fond o’ ha’en a gossip wi’ ony ane ’at was aboot the far’n. We didna care sae muckle for the wife, Eppie Lownie, for she managed the farm, an’ she was fell hard an’ terrible reserved we thocht, no even likin’ ony body to get friendly wi’ the mester, as we called Sam’l. Ay, we made a richt mis ak.’

As I had heard frequently of this queer, mournful mistake made by those who considered Sam’l unfortunate in his wife, I turned Jess on to the main line of her story.

‘ It was the ghost cradle, as they named it, ’at I meant to tell ye aboot. The Bog was a bigger farm in thae days than noo, but I daur say it has the new steadin’ yet. Ay, it winna be new noo, but at the time there was sic a commotion aboot the ghost cradle, they were juist puttin’ the new steadin’ up. There were sax or mair masons at it, wi’ the lads on the farm helpin’, an’ as they were all sleepin’ at the farm, there was great stir aboot the place. I couldna tell ye hoo the story aboot the farm’s being haunted rose, to begin wi’, but I mind fine hoo fleid I was ; ay, an' no only me, but every man-body an' woman-body on the farm. It was aye late 'at the soond began, an' we never saw naething, we juist heard it. The masons said they wouldna hae been sae fleid if they could hae seen 't, but it never was seen. It had the soond o' a cradle rockin', an' when we lay in our beds hearkenin', it grew louder an' louder till it wasna to be borne, an' the women-folk fair skirled wi' fear. The mester was intimate wi' a' the stories aboot ghosts an' water-kelpies an' sic like, an' we couldna help listenin' to them. But he aye said 'at ghosts 'at was juist heard an' no seen was the maist fearsome an' wicked. For all there was sic fear ower the hale farm-toon 'at naebody would gang ower the door alane after the gloamin' cam, the mester said he wasna fleid to sleep i' the kitchen by 'imsel. We thocht it richt brave o' 'im, for ye see he was as helpless as a bairn.

' Richt queer stories rose about the cradle, an' travelled to the ither farms. The wife didna like them ava, for it was said 'at there maun hae been some awful murder o' an infant on the farm, or we wouldna be haunted by a cradle. Syne folk began to mind 'at there had been nae bairns born on the farm as far baek as anybody kent, an' it was said 'at some lang syne crime had made the Bog cursed.

'Dinna think 'at we juist lay on our beds or sat round the fire shakkin wi' fear. Everything 'at could be dune was dune. In the day-time, when naething was heard, the masons explored a' place i' the farm, in the hope o' findin' oot 'at the sound was caused by sic a thing as the wind playin' on the wood in the garret. Even at nights, when they couldna sleep wi' the soond, I've kent them rise in a body an' gang all ower the house wi' lights. I've seen them climbin' on the new steadin', crawlin' along the rafters haudin' their cruizey lamps afore them, an' us women-bodies shiverin' wi' fear at the door. It was on ane o' thae nights 'at a mason fell off the rafters an' broke his leg. Weel, sic a state was the men in to find oot what it was 'at was terrifyin' them sae muckle, 'at the rest o' them climbed up at aince to the place he'd fallen frae, thinkin' there was something there 'at had fleid 'im. But though they crawled back an' forrit there was nae-thing ava.

'The rockin' was louder, we thocht, after that nicht, an' syne the men said it would go on till somebody was killed. That idea took a richt haud o' them, an' twa ran awa back to Tilliedrum, whaur they had come frae. They gaed thegither i' the middle o' the nicht, an' it was thocht next mornin' 'at the ghost had spirited them awa.

'Ye couldna conceive hoo low-spirited we all were after the masons had gien up hope o' findin' a nat'ral cause for the soond. At ord'nar times there's no ony mair lightsome place than a farm after the men hae come in to their supper, but at the Bog we sat dour and sullen; an' there wasna a mason or a farm-servant 'at would gang by 'imself as far as the end o' the hoose whaur the peats was keepit. The mistress maun hae saved some siller that spring through the Egyptians (gypsies) keepin' awa, for the farm had got sic an ill name, 'at nae tinkler would come near 't at nicht. The tailor-man an' his laddie, 'at should hae bidden wi' us to sew things for the men, walkit off fair skeered one mornin', an' settled doon at the farm o' Craigiebuckle, fower mile awa, whaur our lads had to gae to them. Ay, I mind the tailor's sendin' the laddie for the money t'win' him; he hadna the speerit to venture again within soond o' the cradle 'imsel. The men on the farm, though, couldna blame 'im for that. They were juist as flichtered themsels, an' mony a time I saw them hittin' the dogs for whinin' at the soond. The wy the dogs took on was fearsome in itsel, for they seemed to ken, aye when nicht cam on, 'at the rockin' would sune begin, an' if they werena chained they cam runnin' to the hoose. I hae heard the hale glen fu, as ye nicht say, wi' the whinin' o' dogs, for the dogs on the other farms took up the cry, an' in a glen ye can hear soonds terrible far awa at nicht.

'As lang as we sat i' the kitchen, listenin' to what the mester had to say aboot the ghosts in his young days, the cradle would be still, but we were nae suner awa speeritless to our beds than it began, an' sometimes it lasted till mornin'. We lookit upon the mester almost wi' awe, sittin' there sae helpless in his chair, an' no fleid to be left alane. He had lang white hair, an' a saft bonny face 'at would hae made 'im respeckit by onybody, an' aye when we speired if he wasna fleid to be left alane, he said, "Them 'at has a clear conscience has naething to fear frae ghosts."

'There was some 'at said the curse would never leave the farm till the house was razed to the ground, an' it's the truth I'm tellin' ye when I say there was talk among the men aboot settin' t on fire. The mester was richt stern when he heard o' that, quotin' frae Scripture in a solemn wy 'at abashed the masons, but he said 'at in his opeenion there was a bairn buried on the farm, an' till it was found the cradle would go on rockin'. After that the masons dug in a lot o' places lookin' for the body, an' they found some queer things, too, but never nae sign o' a murdered litlin. Ay, I dinna ken what would hae happened if the commotion had gone on muckle langer. One thing I'm sure o' is 'at the mistress would hae gaen daft, she took it a' sae terrible to heart.

'I lauch at it noo, but I tell ye I used to tak my heart to my bed in my mou'th. If ye hinna heard the story, I dinna think ye'll be able to guess what the ghost cradle was.

I said I had been trying to think what the tray had to do wi'th it.

'It had everything to do wi't,' said Jess; 'an' if the masons had kent hoo that cradle was rockit, I think they would hae killed the mester. It was Eppie 'at found oot, an' she telt naebody but me, though mony a ane kens noo. I see ye canna mak it oot yet, so I'll tell ye what the cradle was. The tray was keepit against the kitchen wall near the mester, an' he played on 't wi' his foot. He made it gang bump, bump, an' the soond was juist like a cradle rockin'. Ye could hardly believe sic a thing would hae made that din, but it did, an' ye see we lay in our beds hearkenin' for 't. Ay, when Eppie telt me, I could scarce believe 'at that guid devout-lookin' man could hae been sae wicked. Ye see, when he found hoo terrified

we a' were, he keepit it up. The wy Eppie found out i' the tail o' the day was by wonderin' at 'im sleepin' sae muckle in the daytime. He did that so as to be fresh for his sport at nicht. What a fine releegious man we thocht 'im, too!

'Eppie couldna bear the very sicht o' the tray after that, an' she telt me to break it up; but I keepit it, ye see. The lump i' the middle 's the mark, as ye may say, o' the auld man's foot.'

CHAPTER XII

THE TRAGEDY OF A WIFE

WERE Jess still alive to tell the life-story of Sam'l Fletcher and his wife, you could not hear it and sit still. The ghost cradle is but a page from the black history of a woman who married, to be blotted out from that hour. One case of the kind I myself have known, of a woman so good mated to a man so selfish that I cannot think of her even now with a steady mouth. Hers was the tragedy of living on, more mournful than the tragedy that kills. In Thrums the weavers spoke of 'lousing' from their looms, removing the chains, and there is something woeful in that. But pity poor Nanny Coutts, who took her chains to bed with her.

Nanny was buried a month or more before I came to the house on the brae, and even in Thrums the dead are seldom remembered for so long a time as that. But it was only after Sanders was left alone that we learned what a woman she had been, and how basely we had wronged her. She was an angel, Sanders went about whining when he had no longer a woman to ill-treat. He had this sentimental way with him, but it lost its effect after we knew the man.

‘A deevil couldna hae deserved waur treatment,’ Tammas Haggart said to him; ‘gang oot o’ my sicht, man.’

‘I’ll blame mysel till I die,’ Jess said, with tears in her eyes, ‘for no understandin’ puir Nanny better.’

So Nanny got sympathy at last, but not until her forgiving soul had left her tortured body. There was many a kindly heart in Thrums that would have gone out to her in her lifetime, but we could not have loved her without upbraiding him, and she would not buy sympathy at the price. What a little story it is, and how few words are required to tell it! He was a bad husband to her, and she kept it secret. That is Nanny’s life summed up. It is all that was left behind when her coffin went down the brae. Did she love him to the end, or was she only doing what she thought her duty? It is not for me even to guess. A good woman who suffers is altogether beyond man's reckoning. To such heights of self-sacrifice we cannot rise. It crushes us; it ought to crush us on to our knees. For us who saw Nanny, infirm, shrunken, and so weary, yet a type of the noblest womanhood, suffering for years, and misunderstood her to the end, what expiation can there be? I do not want to storm at the man who made her life so burdensome. Too many years have passed for that, nor would Nanny take it kindly if I called her man names.

Sanders worked little after his marriage. He had a sore back, he said, which became a torture if he leant forward at his loom. What truth there was in this I cannot say, but not every weaver in Thrums could 'louse' when his back grew sore. Nanny went to the loom in his place, filling as well as weaving, and he walked about, dressed better than the common, and with cheerful words for those who had time to listen. Nanny got no approval even for doing his work as well as her own, for they were understood to have money, and Sanders let us think her merely greedy. We drifted into his opinions.

Had Jess been one of those who could go about, she would, I think, have read Nanny better than the rest of us, for her intellect was bright, and always led her straight to her neighbours' hearts. But Nanny visited no one, and so Jess only knew her by hearsay. Nanny's standoffishness, as it was called, was not a popular virtue, and she was blamed still more for trying to keep her husband out of other people's houses. He was so frank and full of gossip, and she was so reserved. He would go everywhere, and she nowhere. He had been known to ask neighbours to tea, and she had shown that she wanted them away, or even begged them not to come. We were not accustomed to go behind the face of a thing, and so we set down Nanny's inhospitality to churlishness or greed. Only after her death, when other women had to attend him, did we get to know what a tyrant Sanders was at his own hearth. The ambition of Nanny's life was that we should never know it, that we should continue extolling him, and say what we chose about herself. She knew that if we went much about the house and saw how he treated her, Sanders would cease to be a respected man in Thrums.

So neat in his dress was Sanders that he was seldom seen abroad in corduroys. His blue bonnet for everyday wear was such as even well-to-do farmers only wore at fair-time, and it was said that he had a handkerchief for every day in the week. Jess often held him up to Hendry as a model of courtesy and polite manners.

‘Him an’ Nanny’s no weel matched,’ she used to say, ‘for he has grand ideas, an’ she’s o’ the commonest. It maun be a richt trial to a man wi’ his fine tastes to hae a wife ’at’s wrapper’s never even on, an’ wha doesna wash her mutch aince in a month.’

It is true that Nanny was a slattern, but only because she married into slavery. She was kept so busy washing and ironing for Sanders that she ceased to care how she looked herself. What did it matter whether her mutch was clean?

Weaving and washing and cooking, doing the work of a breadwinner as well as of a housewife, hers was soon a body prematurely old, on which no wrapper would sit becomingly. Before her face, Sanders would hint that her slovenly ways and dress tried him sorely, and in company at least she only bowed her head. We were given to respecting those who worked hard, but Nanny, we thought, was a woman of means, and Sanders let us call her a miser. He was always anxious, he said, to be generous, but Nanny would not let him assist a starving child. They had really not a penny beyond what Nanny earned at the loom, and now we know how Sanders shook her if she did not earn enough. His vanity was responsible for the story about her wealth, and she would not have us think him vain.

Because she did so much, we said that she was as strong as a cart-horse. The doctor who attended her during the last week of her life discovered that she had never been well. Yet we had often wondered at her letting Sanders pit his own potatoes when he was so unable.

‘Them ’at’s strong, ye see, Sanders explained, ‘doesna ken what illness is, an’ so it’s nat’ral they shouldna sympathise wi’ onweel fowk. Ay, I’m rale thankfu’ ’a: Nanny keeps her health. I often envy her.’

These were considered creditable sentiments, and so they might have been had Nanny uttered them. Thus easily, Sanders built up a reputation for never complaining. I know now that he was a hard and cruel man, who should have married a shrew; but while Nanny lived I thought he had a beautiful nature. Many a time I have spoken with him at Hendry’s gate, and felt the better of his heartiness.

‘I mauna complain,’ he always said; ‘na, we maun juist fecht awa.’

Little, indeed, had he to complain of, and little did he fight away.

Sanders went twice to church every Sabbath, and thrice when he got the chance. There was no man who joined so lustily in the singing or looked straighter at the minister during the prayer. I have heard the minister say that Sanders’s constant attendance was an encouragement and a help to him. Nanny had been a great church-goer when she was a maiden, but after her marriage she only went in the afternoons, and a time came when she ceased altogether to attend. The minister admonished her many times, telling her, among other things, that her irreligious ways were a distress to her husband. She never replied, that she could not go to church in the forenoon because Sanders insisted on a hot meal being waiting for him when the service ended. But it was true that Sanders, for appearance's sake, would have had her go to church in the afternoons. It is now believed that on this point alone did she refuse to do as she was bidden. Nanny was very far from perfect, and the reason she forsook the kirk utterly was because she had no Sabbath clothes.

She died as she had lived, saying not a word when the minister, thinking it his duty, drew a cruel comparison between her life and her husband's.

'I got my first glimpse into the real state of affairs in that house,' the doctor told me one night on the brae, 'the day before she died. "You're sure there's no hope for me?" she asked wistfully, and when I had 'o tell the truth she sank back on the pillow with a look of joy.'

Nanny died with a lie on her lips. 'Ay,' she said, 'Sanders has been a guid man to me.'

CHAPTER XIII

MAKING THE BEST OF IT

HENDRY had a way of resuming a conversation where he left off the night before. He would revolve a topic in his mind, too, and then begin aloud, 'He's a queer ane,' or, 'Say ye so?' which was at times perplexing. With the whole day before them, none of the family was inclined to 'waste strength in talk; but one morning when he was blowing the steam off his porridge, Hendry said suddenly—

'He's hame again.'

The women-folk gave him time to say to whom he was referring, which he occasionally did as an afterthought. But he began to sup his porridge, making eyes as it went steaming down his throat.

'I dinna ken wha ye mean,' Jess said; while Leeby, who was on her knees rubbing the hearthstone a bright blue, paused to catch her father's answer.

'Jeames Geogehan,' replied Hendry, with the horn spoon in his mouth.

Leeby turned to Jess for enlightenment.

'Geogehan,' repeated Jess; 'what, no little Jeames 'at ran awa?'

'Ay, ay, but he's a muckle soot man noo, an' gey grey.'

'Ou, I dinna wonder at that. It's a guid forty year since he ran off.'

'I waurant ye couldna say exact hoo lang syne it is?'

Hendry asked this question because Jess was notorious for her memory, and he gloried in putting it to the test.

'Let's see,' she said.

'But wha is he?' asked Leeby. 'I never kent nae Geogehans in Thrums.'

'Weel, it's forty-one years syne come Michaelmas,' said Jess.

'Hoo do ye ken?'

'I ken fine. Ye mind his father had been lickin' 'im, an' he ran awa in a passion, cryin' oot 'at he would never come back ? Ay, then, he had a pair o' boots on at the time, an' his father ran after 'im an' took them aff 'im. The boots was the last 'at Davie Mearns made, an' it's fully ane-an'-forty years since Davie fell ower the quarry on the day o' the hill-market. That settles 't. Ay, an' Jeames 'll be turned fifty noo, for he was comin' on for ten year auld at that time. Ay, ay, an' he's come back. What a state Eppie 'll be in !'

' Tell 's wha he is, mother.'

' Od, he's Eppie Guthrie's son. Her man was William Geogehan, but he died afore you was born, an' as Jeames was their only bairn, the name o' Geogehan's been a kind o' lost sight o'. Hae ye seen him, Hendry ? Is 't true 'at he made a fortune in thae far-awa countries ? Eppie 'll be blawin' aboot him richt ?'

' There's nae doubt aboot the siller,' said Hendry, 'for he drove in a carriage frae Tilliedrum, an' they say he needs a closet to hing his claes in, there's sic a heap o' them. Ay, but that's no a' he's brocht, na, far frae a'.'

‘ Dinna gang awa till ye ’ve telt ’s a’ aboot ’im. What mair has he brocht ? ’

‘ He ’s brocht a wife,’ said Hendry, twisting his face curiously.

‘ There ’s naething surprisin’ i’ that.’

‘ Ay, but there is, though. Ye see, Eppie had a letter frae ’im no mony weeks syne, sayin’ ’at he wasna deid, an’ he was comin’ hame wi’ a fortune. He said, too, ’at he was a single man, an’ she ’s been boastin’ aboot that, so ye may think ’at she got a surprise when he hands a wuman oot o’ the carriage.’

‘ An’ no a pleasant ane,’ said Jess. ‘ Had he been leein’ ? ’

‘ Na, he was single when he wrote, an’ single when he got the length o’ Tilliedrum. Ye see, he fell in wi’ the lassie there, an’ juist gaed clean aff his heid aboot her. After managin’ to withstand the women o’ foreign lands for a’ thae years, he gaed fair skeer aboot this stocky at Tilliedrum. She ’s juist seventeen year auld, an’ the auld fule sits wi’ his airm round her in Eppie’s hoose, though they ’ve been mairit this fortnicht.’

‘The doited fule,’ said Jess.

James Geogehan and his bride became the talk of Thrums, and Jess saw them from her window several times. The first time she had only eyes for the jacket with fur round it worn by Mrs. Geogehan, but subsequently she took in Jeames.

‘He’s tryin’ to carry ’t aff wi’ his heid in the air,’ she said, ‘but I can see he’s fell shame-faced, an’ nae wonder. Ay, I sepad he’s mair ashamed o’t in his heart than she is. It’s an awful like thing o’ a lassie to marry an auld man. She had dune ’t for the siller. Ay, there’s pounds’ worth o’ fur aboot that jacket.’

‘They say she had siller hersel,’ said Tibbie Birse.

‘Dinna tell me,’ said Jess. ‘I ken by her wy o’ carryin’ hersel ’at she never had a jacket like that afore.’

Eppie was not the only person in Thrums whom the marriage enraged. Stories had long been alive of Jeames’s fortune, which his cousins’ children were some day to divide among themselves, and as a consequence these young men and women looked on Mrs. Geogehan as a thief.

‘ Dinna bring the wife to our hoose, Jeames,’ one of them told him, ‘ for we would be fair ashamed to hae her. We used to hae a respect for yer name, so we couldna look her i’ the face.’

‘ She’s mair like yer dochter than yer wife,’ said another.

‘ Na,’ said a third, ‘ naebody could mistak her for yer dochter. She’s ower young-like for that.’

‘ Wi’ the siller you’ll leave her, Jeames,’ Tammas Haggart told him, ‘ she’ll get a younger man for her second venture.’

All this was very trying to the newly-married man, who was thirsting for sympathy. Hendry was the person whom he took into his confidence.

‘ It may hae been foolish at my time o’ life,’ Hendry reported him to have said, ‘ but I couldna help it. If they juist kent her better they couldna but see ’at she’s a terrible takkin crittur.’

Jeames was generous ; indeed he had come home with the intention of scattering largess.

A beggar met him one day on the brae, and got a shilling from him. She was waving her arms triumphantly as she passed Hendry's house, and Leeby got the story from her.

'Eh, he's a fine man that, an' a saft ane,' the woman said. 'I juist speired at 'im hoo his bonny wife was, an' he oot wi' a shillin'!'

Leeby did not keep this news to herself, and soon it was through the town. Jeames's face began to brighten.

'They're comin' round to a mair sensible wy o' lookin' at things,' he told Hendry. 'I was walkin' wi' the wife i' the buryin' ground yesterday, an' we met Kitty McQueen. She was ane o' the warst agin me at first, but she telt me i' the buryin' ground 'at when a man mairit he should please 'imsel. Oh, they're comin' round.'

What Kitty told Jess was—

'I minded o' the tinkler wuman 'at he gae a shillin' to, so I thocht I would butter up at the auld fule too. Weel, I assure ye, I had nae suner said 'at he was real wise to marry wha he likit than he slips a pound note into my hand.

Ou, Jess, we 've ta'en the wrang wy wi' Jeames. I've telt a' my bairns, 'at if they meet him they're to praise the wife terrible, an' I'm far mista'en if that doesna mean five shillin's to ilka ane o' them.'

Jean Whamond got a pound note for saying that Jeames's wife had an uncommon pretty voice, and Davit Lunan had ten shillings for a judicious word about her attractive manners. Tibbie Birse invited the newly-married couple to tea (one pound).

'They're takkin to her, they're takkin to her,' Jeames said gleefully. 'I kent they would come round in time. Ay, even my mother, 'at was sae mad at first, sits for hours noo aside her, haudin' her hand. They're juist inseparable.'

The time came when we had Mr. and Mrs. Geogehan and Eppie to tea.

'It's true enough,' Leebie ran ben to tell Jess, 'at Eppie and the wife's fond o' ane another. I wouldna hae believed it o' Eppie if I hadna seen it, but I assure ye they sat even at the tea-table haudin' ane another's hands. I waurant they're doin' t' this meenute.'

‘ I wasna born on a Sabbath,’ retorted Jess. ‘ Na, na, dinna tell me Eppie’s fond o’ her. Tell Eppie to come but to the kitchen when the tea’s ower.’

Jess and Eppie had half an hour’s conversation alone, and then our guests left.

‘ It’s a richt guid thing,’ said Hendry, ‘ ’at Eppie has ta’en sic a notion o’ the wife.’

‘ Ou, ay,’ said Jess.

Then Hendry hobbled out of the house.

‘ What said Eppie to ye ? ’ Leeby asked her mother.

‘ Juist what I expeckit,’ Jess answered. ‘ Ye see she’s dependent on Jeames, so she has to butter up ’at im.’

‘ Did she say onything aboot haudin’ the wife’s hand sae fond-like ? ’

‘ Ay, she said it was an awfu’ trial to her, an’ ’at it sickened her to see Jeames an’ the wife baith believing ’at she likit to do ’t.’

CHAPTER XIV

VISITORS AT THE MANSE

ON bringing home his bride, the minister showed her to us, and we thought she would do when she realised that she was not the minister. She was a grand lady from Edinburgh, though very frank, and we simple folk amused her a good deal, especially when we were sitting cowed in the manse parlour drinking a dish of tea with her, as happened to Leeby, her father, and me, three days before Jamie came home.

Leeby had refused to be drawn into conversation, like one who knew her place, yet all her actions were genteel and her monosyllabic replies in the Englishy tongue, as of one who was, after all, a little bit above the common. When the minister's wife asked her whether she took sugar and cream, she said politely, 'If you please' (though she did not take sugar), a reply that contrasted with Hendry's equally well-intended answer to the same question. 'I'm no partikler' was what Hendry said.

Hendry had left home glumly, declaring that the white collar Jess had put on him would throttle him; but her feikieness ended in his surrender, and he was looking unusually perjink. Had not his daughter been present he would have been the most at ease of the company, but her manners were too fine 'not to make an impression upon one who knew her on her everyday behaviour, and she had also ways of bringing Hendry to himself by a touch beneath the table. It was in church that Leeby brought to perfection her manner of looking after her father. When he had confidence in the preacher's soundness, he would sometimes have slept in his pew if Leeby had not had a watchful foot. She wakened him in an instant, while still looking modestly at the pulpit; however reverently he might try to fall over, Leeby's foot went out. She was such an artist that I never caught her in the act. All I knew for certain was that, now and then, Hendry suddenly sat up.

The ordeal was over when Leeby went upstairs to put on her things. After tea Hendry had become bolder in talk, his subject being ministerial. He had an extraordinary knowledge, got no one knew where, of the matrimonial affairs of all the ministers in these parts, and his stories about them frequently ended with a chuckle. He always took it for granted that a minister's marriage was womanhood's great triumph, and that the particular woman who got him must be very clever. Some of his tales were even more curious than he thought them, such as the one Leebie tried to interrupt by saying we must be going.

'There's Mr. Pennycuik, noo,' said Hendry, shaking his head in wonder at what he had to tell; 'him 'at's minister at Tilliedrum. Weel, when he was a probationer he was mighty poor, an' one day he was walkin' into Thrums frae Glen Quharity, an' he taks a rest at a little housey on the road. The fowk didna ken him ava, but they saw he was a minister, an' the lassie was sorry to see him wi' sic an auld hat. What think ye she did?'

'Come away, father,' said Leebie, re-entering the parlour; but Hendry was now in full pursuit of his story.

‘I’ll tell ye what she did,’ he continued. ‘She juist took his hat awa, an’ put her father’s new ane in its place, an’ Mr. Pennycuick never kent the differ till he landed in Thrums. It was terrible kind o’ her. Ay, but the auld man would be in a mighty rage when he found she had swappit the hats.’

‘Come away,’ said Leeby, still politely, though she was burning to tell her mother how Hendry had disgraced them.

‘The minister,’ said Hendry, turning his back on Leeby, ‘didna forget the lassie. Na; as sune as he got a kirk, he married her. Ay, it was rale noble of ’im.’

I do not know what Leeby said to Hendry when she got him beyond the manse gate, for I stayed behind to talk to the minister. As it turned out, the minister’s wife did most of the talking, smiling good-humouredly at country gawkins the while.

‘Yes,’ she said, ‘I am sure I shall like Thrums, though those teas to the congregation are a little trying. Do you know, Thrums is the only place I was ever in where it struck me that the men are cleverer than the women.'

She told us why.

'Well, to-night affords a case in point. Mr. McQumpha was quite brilliant, was he not, in comparison with his daughter. Really she seemed so put out at being at the manse that she could not raise her eyes. I question if she would know me again, and I am sure she sat in the room as one blindfolded. I left her in the bedroom a minute, and I assure you, when I returned she was still standing on the same spot in the centre of the floor.'

I pointed out that Leeby had been awestruck.

'I suppose so,' she said; 'but it is a pity she cannot make use of her eyes, if not of her tongue. Ah, the Thrums women are good, I believe, but their wits are sadly in need of sharpening. I dare say it comes of living in so small a place.'

I overtook Leeby on the brae, aware, as I saw her alone, that it had been her father whom I passed talking to Tammas Haggart in the square. Hendry stopped to have what he called a tove with any likely person he encountered, and, indeed, though he and I often took a walk on Saturdays, I generally lost him before we were clear of the town.

In a few moments Leeby and I were at home to give Jess the news.

‘Whaur’s yer father?’ asked Jess, as if Hendry’s way of dropping behind was still unknown to her.

‘Ou, I left him speakin’ to Gavin Birse,’ said Leeby. ‘I daur say he’s awa to some hoose.’

‘It’s no very silvendy (safe) his comin’ ower the brae by himsel,’ said Jess, adding in a bitter tone of conviction, ‘but he’ll gang in to no hoose as lang as he’s so weel dressed. Na, he would think it boastfu’.

I sat down to a book by the kitchen fire; but, as Leeby became communicative, I read less and less. While she spoke she was baking bannocks with all the might of her, and Jess, leaning forward in her chair, was arranging them in a semicircle round the fire.

‘Na,’ was the first remark of Leeby’s that came between me and my book, 'it is no new furniture.'

'But there was three cart-loads o't, Leeby, sent on frae Edinbory. Tibb e Birse helpit to lift it in, and she said the parlour furniture beat a'.'

'Ou, it's substantial, but it's no new. I sepad it had been bocht cheap second-hand, for the chair I had was terrible scratched-like, an' what's mair, the airm-chair was a heap shinnier than the rest.'

'Ay, ay, I wager it had been new stuffed. Tibbie said the carpet cowed for grandeur?'

'Oh, I dinna deny it's a guid carpet; but if it's been turned once it's been turned half a dozen times, so it's far frae new. Ay, an' forby, it was rale threadbare aneath the table, so ye may be sure they've been cuttin't an' puttin' the worn pairt whaur it would be least seen.'

'They say 'at there's twa grand gas brackets i' the parlour, an' a wonderfu' gasoliery i' the dinin'-room?'

'We wasna in the dinin'-room, so I ken naething about the gasolieri ; but I 'll tell ye what the gas brackets is. I recognised them immediately. Ye mind the auld gasolieri i' the dinin'-room had twa lights ? Ay, then, the parlour brackets is made oot o' the auld gasolieri.'

' Weel, Leeby, as sure as ye 're standin' there, that passed through my head as sune as Tibbie mentioned them ! '

' There's nae doot about it. Ay, I was in ane o' the bedrooms, too ! '

' It would be grand ? '

' I wouldna say 'at it was partikler grand, but there was a great mask (quantity) o' things in 't, an' near everything was covered wi' cretonne. But the chairs dinna match. There was a very bonny-painted cloth alang the chimley—what they call a mantelpiece border, I warrant.'

' Sal, I 've often wondered what they was.'

' Weel, I assure ye they winna be ill to mak, for the border was juist nailed upon a board laid on the chimley. There's naething to hender 's makin' ane for the room.'

‘ Ay, we could sew something on the border instead o’ paintin’ t. The room lookit weel, ye say ? ’

‘ Yes, but it was econonically furnished. There was nae carpet below the wax-cloth ; na, there was nane below the bed either.’

‘ Was ’t a grand bed ? ’

‘ It had a fell lot o’ brass aoot it, but there was juist one pair o’ blankets. I thocht it was gey shabby, ha’en the ewer a different pattern frae the basin ; ay, an’ there was juist a poker in the fireplace, there was nae tangs.’

‘ Yea, yea ; they ’ll hae but one set o’ bedroom fire-irons. The tangs ’ll be in anither room. Tod, that’s no sae mighty grand for Edinbory. What like was she hersel ? ’

‘ Ou, vary ladylike and saft spoken. She’s a canty body an’ frank. She wears her hair low on the left side to hod (hide) a scar, an’ there’s twa warts on her richt hand.’

‘ There hadna been a fire i’ the parlour ? ’

‘ No, but it was ready to licht. There was sticks and paper in ’t. The paper was oot o’ a dressmaker’s journal.’

‘Ye say so? She’ll mak her ain frocks, I sepad.’

When Hendry entered to take off his collar and coat before sitting down to his evening meal of hot water, porter, and bread mixed in a bowl, Jess sent me off to the attic. As I climbed the stairs I remembered that the minister’s wife thought Leeby in need of sharpening.

CHAPTER XV

HOW GAVIN BIRSE PUT IT TO MAG LOWNIE

ON a wet day the rain gathered in blobs on the road that passed our garden. Then it crawled into the cart-tracks¹ until the road was streaked with water. Lastly, the water gathered in heavy yellow pools. If the on-ding still continued, clods of earth toppled from the garden dyke into the ditch.

On such a day, when even the dulseman had gone into shelter, and the women scudded by with their wrappers over their heads, came Gavin Birse to our door. Gavin, who was the Glen Quharity post, was still young, but had never been quite the same man since some amateurs in the glen ironed his back for rheumatism. I thought he had called to have a crack with me. He sent his compliments up to the attic, however, by Leeby, and would I come and be a witness ?

Gavin came up and explained. He had taken off his scarf and thrust it into his pocket, lest the rain should take the colour out of it. His boots cheeped, and his shoulders had risen to his ears. He stood steaming before my fire.

‘If it’s no ower muckle to ask ye,’ he said, ‘I would like ye for a witness.’

‘A witness! But for what do you need a witness, Gavin?’

‘I want ye,’ he said, ‘to come wi’ me to Mag’s, and be a witness.’

Gavin and Mag Lownie had been engaged for a year or more. Mag was the daughter of Janet Ogilvy, who was best remembered as the body that took the hill (that is, wandered about it) for twelve hours on the day Mr. Dishart, the Auld Licht minister, accepted a call to another church.

‘You don’t mean to tell me, Gavin,’ I asked, ‘that your marriage is to take place to-day?’

By the twist of his mouth I saw that he was only deferring a smile.

‘Far frae that,’ he said.

‘ Ah, then, you have quarrelled, and I am to speak up for you ? ’

‘ Na, na,’ he said, ‘ I dinna want ye to do that above all things. It would be a favour if ye could gie me a bad character.’

This beat me, and, I dare say, my face showed it.

‘ I ’m no juist what ye would call anxious to marry Mag noo,’ said Gavin, without a tremor.

I told him to go on.

‘ There ’s a lassie oot at Craigiebuckle,’ he explained, ‘ workin’ on the farm—Jeanie Luke by name. Ye may hae seen her ? ’

‘ What of her ? ’ I asked severely. •

‘ Weel,’ said Gavin, still unabashed, ‘ I ’m thinkin’ noo ’at I would rather hae her.’

Then he stated his case more fully.

‘ Ay, I thocht I liked Mag oncommon till I saw Jeanie, an’ I like her fine yet, but I prefer the other ane. That state o’ matters canna gang on for ever, so I came into Thrums the day to settle ’t one wy or another.’

‘ And how,’ I asked, ‘ do you propose going about it ? It is a somewhat delicate business.’

‘Ou, I see nae great difficulty in ’t. I’ll speir at Mag, blunt oot, if she’ll let me aff. Yes, I’ll put it to her plain.’

‘You’re sure Jeanie would take you?’

‘Ay; oh, there’s nae fear o’ that.’

‘But if Mag keeps you to your bargain?’

‘Weel, in that case there’s nae harm done.’

‘You are in a great hurry, Gavin?’

‘Ye may say that; but I want to be married. The wifie I lodge wi’ canna last lang, an’ I would like to settle doon in some place.’

‘So you are on your way to Mag’s now?’

‘Ay, we’ll get in atween twal’ and ane.’

‘Oh, yes; but why do you want me to go with you?’

‘I want ye for a witness. If she winna let me aff, weel and guid; and if she will, it’s better to hae a witness in case she should go back on her word.’

Gavin made his proposal briskly, and as coolly as if he were only asking me to go fishing; but I did not accompany him to Mag’s. He left the house to look for another witness, and about an hour afterwards Jess saw him pass with Tammag Haggart. Tammag cried in during the evening to tell us how the mission prospered.

‘Mind ye,’ said Tammas, a drop of water hanging to the point of his nose, ‘I disclaim all responsibility in the business. I ken Mag weel for a thrifty, respectable woman, as her mither was afore her, and so I said to Gavin when he came to speir me.’

‘Ay, mony a pirn has Lisbeth filled to me,’ said Hendry, settling down to a reminiscence.

‘No to be ower hard on Gavin,’ continued Tammas, forestalling Hendry. ‘he took what I said in guid part; but aye when I stopped speakin’ to draw breath, he says, “The queistion is, will ye come wi’ me?” He was mighty made up in ’s mind.’

‘Weel, ye went wi’ him,’ suggested Jess, who wanted to bring Tammas to the point.

‘Ay,’ said the stonebreaker, ‘but no in sic a hurry as that.’

He worked his mouth round and round, to clear the course, as it were, for a sarcasm.

‘Fowk often say,’ he continued, ‘at a’m quick beyond the ordinar’ in seein’ the humorous side o’ things.’

Here Tammas paused, and looked at us.

‘So ye are, Tammas,’ said Hendry. ‘Losh, ye mind hoo ye saw the humorous side o’ me wearin’ a pair o’ boots ’at wisna marrows ! No, the ane had a toe-piece on and the other hadna.’

‘Ye juist wore them sometimes when ye was delvin’,’ broke in Jess, ‘ye have as guid a pair o’ boots as ony in Thrums.’

‘Ay, but I had worn them,’ said Hendry, ‘at odd times for mair than a year, an’ I had never seen the humorous side o’ them. Weel, as fac as death (here he addressed me), Tammas had juist seen them twa or three times when he saw the humorous side o’ them. Syne I saw their humorous side too, but no till Tammas pointed it oot.’

‘That was naething,’ said Tammas, ‘naething ava to some things I’ve done.’

‘But what aboot Mag ?’ said Leeby.

‘We wasna that length, was we ?’ said Tammas. ‘Na, we was speakin’ aboot the humorous side. Ay, wait a wee, I didna mention the humorous side for naething.’

He paused to reflect.

‘ Oh, yes,’ he said at last, brightening up, ‘ I was sayin’ to ye hoo quick I was to see the humorous side o’ onything. Ay, then, what made me say that was ’at in a clink (flash) I saw the humorous side o’ Gav n’s position.’

‘ Man, man,’ said Hendry admiringly, ‘ and what is ’t ? ’

‘ Oh, it ’s this, there ’s something humorous in speirin’ a woman to let ye aff so as ye can be married to another woman.’

‘ I daur say there is,’ said Hendry doubtfully.

‘ Did she let him aff ? ’ asked Jess, taking the words out of Leebie’s mouth.

‘ I ’m comin’ to that,’ said Tammas. ‘ Gavin proposes to me after I had haen my laugh——’

‘ Yes,’ cried Hendry, banging the table with his fist, ‘ it has a humorous side. Ye ’re richt again, Tammas.’

‘ I wish ye wadna blatter (beat) the table,’ said Jess, and then Tammas proceeded.

‘ Gavin wanted me to tak paper an’ ink an’ a pen wi’ me, to write the proceedin’s doon, but I said, “ Na, na, I ’ll tak paper, but nae ink nor nae pen, for there 'll be ink an' a pen there." That was what I said.'

'An' did she let him aff?' asked Leebie.

'Weel,' said Tammas, 'aff we goes to Mag's hoose, an' sure enough Mag was in. She was alane, too; so Gavin, no to waste time, juist sat doon for politeness' sake, an' syne rises up again; an' says he, "Marget Lownie, I hae a solemn question to speir at ye, namely this, Will you, Marget Lownie, let me, Gavin Birse, aff."'

'Mag would start at that?'

'Sal, she was braw an' cool. I thocht she maun hae got wind o' his intentions aforehand, for she juist replies, quiet-like, "Hoo do ye want aff, Gavin?"'

"Because," says he, like a book, "my affections has undergone a change."

"Ye mean Jean Luke," says Mag.

"That is wha I mean," says Gavin, very straitforrard.'

'But she didna let him aff, did she?'

'Na, she wasna the kind. Says she, "I wonder to hear ye, Gavin, but a'm no goin' to agree to naething o' that sort."

“ Think it ower,” says Gavin.

“ Na, my mind ’s made up ” said she.

“ Ye would sune get anither man,” he says earnestly.

“ Hoo do I ken that ? ” she speirs, rale sensibly, I thocht, for men ’s no sae easy to get.

“ A’m sure o’t,” Gavin says, wi’ mighty conviction in his voice, “ for ye ’re bonny to look at, an’ weel-ken’t for bein a guid body.”

“ Ay,” says Mag, “ I ’m glad ye like me, Gavin, for ye have to tak me.”

‘ That put a clincher on him,’ interrupted Hendry.

‘ He was loth to gie in,’ replied Tammas, ‘ so he says, “ Ye think a’m a fine character, Marget Lownie, but ye ’re very far mista’en. I wouldna wonder but what I was lossin’ my place some o’ thae days, an’ syne whaur would ye be ?— Marget Lownie,” he goes on, “ a’m nat’rally lazy an’ fond o’ the drink. As sure as ye stand there, a’m a reg’lar deevil ! ” ’

‘ That was strong language,’ said Hendry, ‘ but he would be wantin’ to fleg (frighten) her ? ’

‘ Juist so, but he didna manage ’t, for Mag says, “ We a’ hae oor faults, Gavin, an’ deevil or no deevil, ye ’re the man for me ! ” ’

‘ Gavin thocht a bit,’ continued Tammas, ‘ an’ syne he tries her on a new tack. “ Marget Lownie,” he says, “ yer father’s an auld man noo, an’ he has naebody but yersel to look after him. I’m thinkin’ it would be kind o’ cruel o’ me to tak ye awa frae him ? ” ’

‘ Mag wouldna be ta’en in wi’ that ; she wasna born on a Sawbath,’ said Jess, using one of her favourite sayings.

‘ She wasna,’ answered Tammas. ‘ Says she, “ Hae nae fear on that score, Gavin ; my father’s fine willin’ to spare me ! ” ’

‘ An’ that ended it ? ’

‘ Ay, that ended it.’

‘ Did ye tak it doon in writin’ ? ’ asked Hendry.

‘ There was nae need,’ said Tammas, handing round his snuff-mull. ‘ No, I never touched paper. When I saw the thing was settled, I left them to their coortin’. They’re to tak a look at Snecky Hobart’s auld hoose the nicht. It’s to let.’

CHAPTER XVI

THE SON FROM LONDON

IN the spring of the year there used to come to Thrums a painter from nature whom Hendry spoke of as the drawer. He lodged with Jess in my attic, and when the weavers met him they said, 'Weel, drawer,' and then passed on, grinning. Tammas Haggart was the first to say this.

The drawer was held to be a poor man because he straggled about the country looking for subjects for his draws, and Jess, as was her way, gave him many comforts for which she would not charge. That, I dare say, was why he painted for her a little portrait of Jamie. When the drawer came back to Thrums he always found the painting in a frame in the room. Here I must make a confession about Jess. She did not in her secret mind think the portrait quite the thing, and as soon as the drawer departed it was removed from the frame to make way for a calendar. The deception was very innocent, Jess being anxious not to hurt the donor's feelings.

To those who have the artist's eye, the picture, which hangs in my schoolhouse now, does not show a handsome lad, Jamie being short and dapper, with straw-coloured hair, and a chin that ran away into his neck. That is how I once regarded him, but I have little heart for criticism of those I like, and despite his madness for a season, of which, alas, I shall have to tell, I am always Jamie's friend. Even to hear any one disparaging the appearance of Jess's son is to me a pain.

All Jess's acquaintances knew that in the beginning of every month a registered letter reached her from London. To her it was not a matter to keep secret. She was proud that the help she and Hendry needed in the gloaming of their lives should come from their beloved son, and the neighbours esteemed Jamie because he was good to his mother. Jess had more humour than any other woman I have known, while Leeby was but sparingly endowed ; yet, as the month neared its close, it was the daughter who put on the humerist, Jess thinking money too serious a thing to jest about. Then if Leeby had a moment for gossip, as when ironing a dickey for Hendry, and the iron was a trifle too hot, she would look archly at me before addressing her mother in these words :

‘ Will he send, think ye ? ’

Jess, who had a conviction that he would send, affected surprise at the question.

‘ Will Jamie send this month, do ye mean ? Na, oh, losh no ! it ’s no to be expeckit. Na, he couldna do ’t this time.’ •

‘ That ’s what ye aye say, but he aye sends. Yes, an’ vara weel ye ken ’at he wull send.’

‘ Na, na, Leeby, dinna let me ever think o’ sic a thing this month.’

‘ As if ye wasna thinkin’ o’t day an’ nicht ! ’

‘ He ’s terrible mindfu’, Leeby, but he doesna hae ’t. Na, no this month ; mebbe next month.’

‘ Do you mean to tell me, mother, ’at ye ’ll no be up oot o’ yer bed on Monunday an hour afore yer usual time, lookin’ for the post ? ’

‘Na, no this time. I may be up, an’ tak a look for ’im, but no expeckin’ a registerdy ; na, na, that wouldna be reasonable.’

‘Reasonable here, reasonable there, up you ’ll be, keekin’ (peering) through the blind to see if the post ’s comin’, ay, an’ what ’s mair, the post will come, and a registerdy in his hand wi’ fifteen shillings in ’t at the least.’

‘Dinna say fifteen, Leeby ; I would never think o’ sic a sum. Mebbe five——’

‘Five ! I wonder to hear ye. Vera weel you ken ’at since he had twenty-twa shillings in the week he ’s never sent less than half a sovereign.’

‘No, but we canna expeck——’

‘Expeck ! No, but it’s no expeck, it’s get.’

On the Monday morning when I came downstairs Jess was in her chair by the window, beaming, a piece of paper in her hand. I did not require to be told about it, but I was told. Jess had been up before Leeby could get the fire lit, with great difficulty reaching the window in her bare feet, and many a time had she said that the post must be by.

‘Havers,’ said Leeby, ‘he winna be for an hour yet. Come awa back to your bed.’

‘Na, he maun be by,’ Jess would say in a few minutes; ‘ou, we couldna expeck this month.’

So it went on until Jess’s hand shook the blind.

‘He’s comin’, Leeby, he’s comin’. He’ll no hae naething, na, I couldna expeck—— He’s by!’

‘I dinna believe it,’ cried Leeby, running to the window, ‘he’s juist at his tricks again.’

This was in reference to a way our saturnine post had of pretending that he brought no letters and passing the door. Then he turned back. ‘Mistress McQumpha,’ he cried, and whistled.

‘Run, Leeby, run,’ said Jess excitedly.

Leeby hastened to the door, and came back with a registered letter.

‘Registerdy,’ she cried in triumph, and Jess, with fond hands, opened the letter. By the time I came down the money was hid away in a box beneath the bed, where not even Leeby could find it, and Jess was on her chair hugging the letter. She preserved all her registered envelopes.

This was the first time I had been in Thrums when Jamie was expected for his ten days' holiday, and for a week we discussed little else. Though he had written saying when he would sail for Dundee, there was quite a possibility of his appearing on the brae at any moment, for he liked to take Jess and 'Leeby by surprise. Hendry there was no surprising, unless he was in the mood for it, and the coolness of him was one of Jess's grievances. Just two years earlier Jamie came north a week before his time, and his father saw him from the window. Instead of crying out in amazement or hacking his face, for he was shaving at the time, Hendry calmly wiped his razor on the window-sill, and said—

‘Ay, there's Jamie.’

Jamie was a little disappointed at being seen in this way, for he had been looking forward for four-and-forty hours to repeating the sensation of the year before. On that occasion he had got to the door unnoticed, where he stopped to listen. I dare say he checked his breath, the better to catch his mother's voice, for Jess being an invalid, Jamie thought of her first. He had Leeby sworn to write the truth about her, but many an anxious hour he had on hearing that she was 'complaining fell (considerably) about her back the day,' Leeby, as he knew, being frightened to alarm him. Jamie, too, had given his promise to tell exactly how he was keeping, but often he wrote that he was 'fine' when Jess had her doubts. When Hendry wrote he spread himself over the table, and said that Jess was 'juist about it,' or 'aff and on,' which does not tell much. So Jamie hearkened painfully at the door, and by and by heard his mother say to Leeby that she was sure the teapot was running out. Perhaps that voice was as sweet to him as the music of a maiden to her lover, but Jamie did not rush into his mother's arms. Jess has told me with a beaming face how craftily he behaved. The old man, of lungs that shook Thrums by night, who went from door to door selling firewood, had a way of shoving doors rudely open and crying—

‘Ony rozetty roots?’ and him Jamie imitated.

‘Juist think,’ Jess said, as she recalled the incident, ‘what a startle we got. As we think, Pete kicks open the door and cries oot, “Ony rozetty roots?” and Leeby says “No,” and gangs to shut the door. Next minute she screeches, “What, what, what!” and in walks Jamie!’

Jess was never able to decide whether it was more delightful to be taken aback in this way or to prepare for Jamie. Sudden excitement was bad for her, according to Hendry, who got his medical knowledge second-hand from persons under treatment, but with Jamie’s appearance on the threshold Jess’s health began to improve. This time he kept to the appointed day, and the house was turned upside down in his honour. Such a polish did Leeby put on the flagons which hung on the kitchen wall, that, passing between them and the window, I thought once I had been struck by lightning. On the morning of the day that was to bring him, Leeby was up at two o’clock, and eight hours before he could possibly arrive Jess had a nightshirt warming for him at the fire. I was no longer anybody, except as a person who could give Jamie advice. Jess told me what I was to say. The only thing he and his mother quarrelled about was the underclothing she would swaddle him in, and Jess asked me to back her up in her entreaties.

‘There’s no a doubt,’ she said, ‘but what it’s a hantle caulder here than in London, an’ it would be a terrible business if he was to tak the cauld.’

Jamie was to sail from London to Dundee, and come on to Thrums from Tilliedrum in the post-cart. The road at that time, however, avoided the brae, and at a certain point Jamie’s custom was to alight, and take the short cut home, along a farm road and up the commonty. Here, too, Hookey Crewe, the post, deposited his passenger’s box, which Hendry wheeled home in a barrow. Long before the cart had lost sight of Tilliedrum, Jess was at her window.

‘Tell her Hookey’s often late on Monundays,’ Leeby whispered to me, 'for she'll gang oot o' her mind if she thinks there's onything wrang.'

Soon Jess was painfully excited, though she sat as still as salt.

'It maun be yer time,' she said, looking at both Leeby and me, for in Thrums we went out and met our friends.

'Hoots,' retorted Leeby, 'trying to be hardy, 'Hookey canna be oot o' Tilliedrum yet.'

'He maun hae startit lang syne.'

'I wonder at ye, mother, puttin' yersel in sic a state. Ye'll be ill when he comes.'

'Na, a'm in nae state, Leeby, but there'll no be nae accident, will there?'

'It's most provokin' 'at ye will think 'at every time Jamie steps into a machine there'll be an accident. A'm sure if ye would tak mair after my father, it would be a blessin'. Look hoo cool he is.'

'Whaur is he, Leeby?'

'Oh, I dinna ken. The hinmost time I saw him he was layin' doon the law aboot something to T'nowhead.'

‘It’s an awfu’ wy that he has o’ gaen oot withoot a word. I wouldna wnder ’at he’s no bein’ in time to meet Jamie, an’ that would be a pretty business.’

‘Od, ye’re sure he’ll be in taw time.’

‘But he hasna ta’en the barrow wi’ him, an’ hoo is Jamie’s luggage to be brocht up withoot a barrow?’

‘Barrow! He took the barrow to the saw-mill an hour syne, to pick it up at Rob Angus’s on the way.’

Several times Jess was sure she saw the cart in the distance, and implored us to be off.

‘I’ll tak no settle till ye’re awa,’ she said, her face now flushed and her hands working nervously.

‘We’ve time to gang and come twa or three times yet,’ remonstrated Leebie; but Jess gave me so beseeching a look that I put on my hat. Then Hendry dandered in to change his coat deliberately, and when the three of us set off, we left Jess with her eye on the door by which Jamie must enter. He was her only son now, and she had not seen him for a year.

On the way down the commonty, Leeby had the honour of being twice addressed as Miss McQumpha, but her father was Hendry to all, which shows that we make our social position for ourselves. Hendry looked forward to Jamie's annual appearance only a little less hungrily than Jess, but his pulse still beat regularly. Leeby would have considered it almost wicked to talk of anything except Jamie now, but Hendry cried out comments on the tatties, yesterday's roup, the fall in jute, to everybody he encountered. When he and a crony had their say and parted, it was their custom to continue the conversation in shouts until they were out of hearing.

Only to Jess at her window was the cart late that afternoon. Jamie jumped from it in the long greatcoat that had been new to Thrums the year before, and Hendry said calmly—

‘Ay, Jamie.’

Leeby and Jamie made signs that they recognised each other as brother and sister, but I was the only one with whom he shook hands. He was smart in his movements and quite the gentleman, but the Thrums ways took hold of him again at once. He even inquired for his mother in a tone that was meant to deceive me into thinking he did not care how she was.

Hendry would have had a talk out of him on the spot, but was reminded of the luggage. We took the heavy farm road, and soon we were at the sawmill. I am naturally leisurely, but we climbed the cornmonty at a stride. Jamie pretended to be calm, but in a dark place I saw him take Leeby's hand, and after that he said not a word. His eyes were fixed on the elbow of the brae, where he would come into sight of his mother's window. Many a time, I know, that lad had prayed to God for still another sight of the window with his mother at it. So we came to the corner where the stile is that Sam'l Dickie jumped in the race for T'nowhead's Bell, and before Jamie was the house of his childhood and his mother's window, and the fond, anxious face of his mother herself. My eyes are dull, and I did not see her, but suddenly Jamie cried out, 'My mother!' and Leeby and I were left behind. When I reached the kitchen Jess was crying, and her son's arms were round her neck. I went away to my attic.

There was only one other memorable event of that day. Jamie had finished his tea, and we all sat round him, listening to his adventures and opinions. He told us how the country should be governed, too, and perhaps put on airs a little. Hendry asked the questions, and Jamie answered them as pat as if he and his father were going through the Shorter Catechism. When Jamie told anything marvellous, as how many towels were used at the shop in a day, or that twopence was the charge for a single shave, his father screwed his mouth together as if preparing to whistle, and then instead made a curious clucking noise with his tongue, which was reserved for the expression of absolute amazement. As for Jess, who was given to making much of me, she ignored my remarks and laughed hilariously at jokes of Jamie's which had been received in silence from me a few minutes before.

Slowly it came to me that Leeby had something on her mind, and that Jamie was talking to her with his eyes. I learned afterwards that they were plotting how to get me out of the kitchen, but were too impatient to wait. Thus it was that the great event happened in my presence. Jamie rose and stood near Jess—I dare say he had planned the scene frequently. Then he produced from his pocket a purse, and coolly opened it. Silence fell upon us as we saw that purse. From it he took a neatly-folded piece of paper, crumpled it into a ball, and flung it into Jess's lap.

I cannot say whether Jess knew what it was. Her hand shook, and for a moment she let the ball of paper lie there.

'Open 't up,' cried Leeby, who was in the secret.

'What is 't?' asked Hendry, drawing nearer.

'It's juist a bit paper Jamie flung at me,' said Jess, and then she unfolded it.

'It's a five-pound note!' cried Hendry.

'Na, na; oh keep us, no,' said Jess; but she knew it was.

For a time she could not speak.

'I canna tak it, Jamie,' she faltered at last.

But Jamie waved his hand, meaning that it was nothing, and then, lest he should burst, hurried out into the garden, where he walked up and down whistling. May God bless the lad, thought I. I do not know the history of that five-pound note, but well aware am I that it grew slowly out of pence and silver, and that Jamie denied his passions many things for this great hour. His sacrifices* watered his young heart and kept it fresh and tender. Let us no longer cheat our consciences by talking of filthy lucre. Money may always be a beautiful thing. It is we who make it grimy.

CHAPTER XVII

A HOME FOR GENIUSES

FROM hints he had let drop at odd times I knew that Tammag Haggart had a scheme for geniuses, but not until the evening after Jamie's arrival did I get it out of him. Hendry was with Jamie at the fishing, and it came about that Tammag and I had the pigsty to ourselves.

'Of course,' he said, when we had got a grip of the subject, 'I dount pretend as my idea's is to be followed withoot deeviation, but on-dootedly something should be done for geniuses, them bein' aboot the only class as we do nae-thing for. Yet they're fowk to be prood o', an' we shouldna let them overdo the thing, nor run into debt; na, na. There was Robbie Burns, noo, as real a genius as ever——'

At the pigsty, where we liked to have more than one topic, we had frequently to tempt Tammag away from Burns.

‘Your scheme,’ I interposed, ‘is for living geniuses, of course?’

‘Ay,’ he said thoughtfully, ‘them ’at’s gone canna be brocht back. Weel, my idea is ’at a Home should be built for geniuses at the public expense, whaur they could all live thegither, an’ be decently looked after. Na, no in London; that’s no my plan, but I would hae’t within an hour’s distance o’ London, say five mile frae the market-place, an’ standin’ in a bit garden, whaur the geniuses could walk aboot arm-in-arm, composin’ their minds.’

‘You would have the grounds walled in, I suppose, so that the public could not intrude?’

‘Weel, there’s a difficulty there, because, ye’ll observe, as the public would support the institootion, they would hae a kind o’ richt to look in. How-some-ever, I daur say we could arrange to fling the grounds open to the public once a week on condition ’at they didna speak to the geniuses. I’m thinkin’ ’at if there was a small chairge for admission the Home could be made self-supportin’. Losh! to think ’at if there had been sic an institootion in his time a man nicht hae sat on the bit cyke and watched Robbie Burns danderin' roond the——'

'You would divide the Home into suites of rooms, so that every inmate would have his own apartments?'

'Not by any means; na, na. The mair I read aboot geniuses the mair clearly I see as their wy o' livin' alone ower muckle is ane o' the things as breaks doon their health, and makes them meeserable. I' the Home they would hae a bedroom apiece, but the parlour and the other sittin'-rooms would be for all, so as they could enjoy ane another's company. The management? Oh, that's aisy. The superintendent would be a medical man appointed by Parliament, and he would hae men-servants to do his biddin'.'

'Not all men-servants, surely?'

'Every one o' them. Man, geniuses is no to be trusted wi' women-folk. No, even Robbie Bu——'

'So he did; but would the inmates have to put themselves entirely in the superintendent's hands?'

‘Nae doubt ; and they would see it was the wisest thing they could do. He would be careful o’ their health, an’ send them early to bed as weel as hae them up at eight sharp. Geniuses’ healths is always breakin’ doon because of late hours, as in the case o’ the lad wha used often to begin his immortal writin’s at twal o’clock at night, a thing ’at would ruin ony constitootion. But the superintendent w^uld see as they had a tasty supper at nine o’clock—something as agreed wi’ them. Then for half an hour they would quiet their brains readin’ oot aloud, time about, frae sic a book as the Pilgrim’s Progress, an’ the gas would be turned aff at ten precisely.’

‘When would you have them up in the morning ?’

‘At sax in summer an’ seven in winter. The superintendent would see as they were all properly bathed every mornin’, cleanliness bein’ most important for the preservation o’ health.’

‘This sounds well ; but suppose a genius broke the rules—lay in bed, for instance, reading by the light of a candle after hours, or refused to take his bath in the morning ?’

‘The superintendent would hae to punish him. The genius would be sent back to his bed, maybe. An’ if he lay lang in the mornin’ he would hae to gang withoot his breakfast.’

‘That would be all very well where the inmate only broke the regulations once in a way ; but suppose he were to refuse to take his bath day after day (and, you know geniuses are said to be eccentric in that particular), what would be done ? You could not starve him ; geniuses are too scarce.’

‘Na, na ; in a case like that he would hae to be reported to the public. The thing would hae to come afore the Hoose of Commons. .Ay, the superintendent would get a member o’ the Opposection to ask a queestion such as “ Can the honourable gentleman, the Secretary of State for Home Affairs, inform the Hoose whether it is a fac that Mr. Sic-a-One, the well-known genius, at present resident in the Home for Geniuses, has, contrairy to regulations, perseestently and obstinately refused to change his linen ; and, if so, whether the Government proposes to take ony steps in the matter ? ” The newspapers would report the discussion next mornin', an' so it would be made public withoot onnecessary ootlay.'

' In a general way, however, you would give the geniuses perfect freedom? They could work when they liked, and come and go when they liked? '

' Not so. The superintendent would fix the hours o' wark, an' they would all write, or whatever it was, thegither in ofe large room. Man, man, it would mak a grand draw for a painter-child, that room, wi' all the geniuses working awa thegither.'

' But when the labours of the day were over the genius would be at liberty to make calls by himself, or to run up, say, to London for an hour or two? '

' Hoots, no, that would spoil everything. It's the drink, ye see, as does for a terrible lot o' geniuses. Even Rob——'

' Alas! yes. But would you have them all teetotallers? '

' What do you tak me for? Na, na; the superintendent would allow them one glass o' toddy every nicht, an' mix it himsel; but he would never let the keys o' the press, whaur he kept the drink, oot o' his hands. They would never be allowed oot o' the garden either, withoot a man to look after them; and I wouldna burthen them wi' ower muckle pocket-money. Saxpence in the week would be sufficecient.'

'How about their clothes ?

'They would get twa suits a year, wi' the letter G sewed on the shoulders so as if they were lost they could be recognised and brocht back.'

'Certainly it is a scheme deserving consideration, and I have no doubt our geniuses would jump at it; but you must remember that some of them would have wives.'

'Ay, an' some o' them would hae husbands. I've been thinkin' that oot, an' I daur say the best plan would be to partition aff a pairt o' the Home for female geniuses.'

'Would Parliament elect the members ?'

'I wouldna trust them. The election would hae to be by compctitive examination. Na, I canna say wha would draw up the queistions. The scheme 's just growin' i' my mind, but the mair I think o't the better I like it.'

CHAPTER XVIII

LEEBY AND JAMIE

By the bank of the Quharity on a summer day I have seen a barefooted girl gaze at the running water until tears filled her eyes. That was the birth of romance. Whether this love be but a beautiful dream I cannot say, but this we see, that it comes to all, and colours the whole future life with gold. Leeby must have dreamt it, but I did not know her then. I have heard of a man who would have taken her far away into a county where the corn is yellow when it is still green with us, but she would not leave her mother, nor was it him she saw in her dream. From her earliest days, when she was still a child staggering round the garden with Jamie in her arms, her duty lay before her, straight as the burying-ground road. Jess had need of her in the little home at the top of the brae, where God, looking down upon her as she scrubbed and gossiped and sat up all night with her ailing mother, and never missed the prayer-meeting, and adored the minister, did not perhaps think her the least of His hand-maids. Her years were less than thirty when He took her away, but she had few days that were altogether dark. Those who bring sunshine to the lives of others cannot keep it from themselves. •

The love Leeby bore for Jamie was such that in their younger days it shamed him. Other laddies knew of it, and flung it at him until he dared Leeby to let on in public that he and she were related. • ‘Hoo is your lass?’ they used to cry to him, inventing a new game.

‘I saw Leeby lookin’ for ye,’ they would say; ‘she’s wearyin’ for ye to gang an’ play wi’ her.’

Then if they were not much bigger boys than himself, Jamie got them against the dyke and hit them hard until they publicly owned to knowing that she was his sister, and that he was not fond of her.

‘It distressed him mair than ye could believe, though,' Jess has told me ; ' an' when he came hame he would greet an' say 'at Leeby disgraced him.'

Leeby, of course, suffered for her too obvious affection.

' I wonder 'at ye dinna try to control yersel,' Jamie would say to her as he grew bigger.

' A'm sure,' said Leeby, ' I never gie ye a look if there 's onybody thêre.'

' A look ! You 're aye lookin' at me sae fond-like 'at I dinna ken what wy to turn.'

' Weel, I canna help it,' said Leeby, probably beginning to whimper.

If Jamie was in a very bad temper he left her, after this, to her own reflections ; but he was naturally soft-hearted.

' A'm no tellin' ye no to care for me,' he told her, ' but juist to keep it mair to yersel. Nae-body would ken frae me 'at a'm fond o' ye.'

' Mebbe ye 're no ? ' said Leeby.

' Ay, am I, but I can keep it secret. When we 're in the hoose a'm juist richt fond o' ye.'

' Do you love me, Jamie ? '

Jamie wagged his head in irritation.

'Love,' he said, 'is an awful like word to use when fowk's weel. Ye shouldna speir sic annoyin' queistions.'

'But if ye juist say ye love me I'll never let on again afore fowk 'at ye're ony thing to me ava.'

'Ay, ye often say that.'

'Do ye no believe my word 't.'

'I believe fine ye mean what ye say, but ye forget yersel when the time comes.'

'Juist try me this time.'

'Weel, then, I do.'

'Do what?' asked the greedy Leebby.

'What ye said.'

'I said love.'

'Weel,' said Jamie, 'I do 't.'

'What do ye do? Say the word.'

'Na,' said Jamie, 'I winna say the word. It's no a word to say, but I do 't.'

That was all she could get out of him, unless he was stricken with remorse, when he even went the length of saying the word.

'Leeby kent perfectly weel,' Jess has said, 'at it was a trial to Jamie to tak her ony gait, an' I often used to say to her 'at I wondered at her want o' pride in priggin' wi' him. Ay, but if she could juist get a promise wrung oot o' him, she didna care hoo muckle she had to prig. Syne they quarrelled, an' ane or baith o' them grat (cried) afore they made it up. I mind when Jamie went to the fishin' Leeby was aye terrible keen to get wi' him, but ye see he wouldna be seen gaen through the toon wi' her. "If ye let me gang," she said to him, "I'll no seek to go through the toon wi' ye. Na, I'll gang roond by the Roods an' you can tak the buryin'-ground road, so as we can meet on the hill." Yes, Leeby was willin' to agree wi' a' that, juist to get gaen wi' him. I've seen lasses makkin themsels sma' for lads often enough, but I never saw ane 'at prigged sae muckle wi' her ain brother. Na, it's other lasses' brothers they like as a rule.'

'But though Jamie was terrible reserved aboot it,' said Leeby, 'he was as fond o' me as ever I was o' him. Ye mind the time I had the measles, mother?'

'A'm no likely to forget it, Leeby,' said Jess, 'an' you blind wi' them for three days. Ay, ay, Jamie was richt ta'en up aboot ye. I mind he broke open his pirly (money-box) an' bocht a ha'penny worth o' something o' ye every day.'

'An' ye hinna forgotten the stick?'

'Deed no, I hinna. Ye see, Jess explained to me, 'Leeby was lyin' ben the hoose, an' Jamie wasna allowed to gang near her for fear o' infection. Weel, he got a lang stick—it was a pea-stick—an' put it aneath the door an' waggled it. Ay, he did that a curran times every day, juist to let her see he was thinkin' o' her.'

'Mair than that,' said Leeby, 'he cried oot 'at he loved me.'

'Ay, but juist aince,' Jess said, 'I dinna mind o't but aince. It was the time the doctor came late, an' Jamie, being waukened by him, thocht ye was deein'. I mind as if it was yesterday hoo he cam runnin' to the door an' cried oot, "I do love ye, Leeby; I love ye richt." The doctor got a start when he heard the voice, but he laughed loud when he understood.'

'He had nae business, though,' said Leeby, 'to tell onybody.'

‘He was a rare clever man, the doctor,’ Jess explained to me, ‘ay, he kent me as weel as though he’d gaen through me wi’ a lichted candle. It got oot through him, an’ the young billies took to sayin’ to Jamie, “Ye do love her, Jamie; ay, ye love her richt.” The only reg’lar fecht I ever kent Jamie hae was wi’ a lad ’at cried that to him. It was Bowlegs Christy’s laddie. Ay, but when she got better Jamie blamed Leeby.’

‘He not only blamed me,’ said Leeby, ‘but he wanted me to pay him back all the bawbees he had spent on me.’

‘Ay, an’ I sepad he got them, too,’ said Jess.

In time Jamie became a barber in Tilliedrum, trudging many heavy miles there and back twice a day that he might sleep at home, trudging bravely I was to say, but it was what he was born to, and there was hardly an alternative. This was the time I saw most of him, and he and Leeby were often in my thoughts. There is as terrible a bubble in the little kettle as on the cauldron of the world, and some of the scenes between Jamie and Leeby were great tragedies, comedies, what you will, until the kettle was taken off the fire. Hers was the more placid temper ; indeed, only in one way could Jamie suddenly rouse her to fury. That was when he hinted that she had a large number of frocks. Leebie knew that there could never be more than a Sabbath frock and an everyday gown for her, both of her mother's making, but Jamie's insinuations were more than she could bear. Then I have seen her seize and shake him. I know from Jess that Leebie cried herself hoarse the day Joey was buried, because her little black frock was not ready for wear.

Until he went to Tilliedrum Jamie had been more a stay-at-home boy than most. The warmth of Jess's love had something to do with keeping his heart aglow, but more, I think, he owed to Leebie. Tilliedrum was his introduction to the world, and for a little it took his head. I was in the house the Sabbath day that he refused to go to church.

He went out in the forenoon to meet the Tilliedrum lads, who were to take him off for a holiday in a cart. Hendry was more wrathful than I remember ever to have seen him, though I have heard how he did with the lodger who broke the Lord's Day. This lodger was a tourist who thought, in folly surely rather than in hardness of heart, to test the convictions of an Auld Licht by insisting on paying his bill on a Sabbath morning. He offered the money to Jess, with the warning that if she did not take it now she might never see it. Jess was so kind and good to her lodgers that he could not have known her long who troubled her with this poor trick. She was sorely in need at the time, and entreated the thoughtless man to have some pity on her.

'Now or never,' he said, holding out the money.

'Put it on the dresser,' said Jess at last, 'an' I'll get it in the morn.'

The few shillings were laid on the dresser, where they remained unfingered until Hendry, with Leeby and Jamie, came in from church.

'What siller's that?' asked Hendry, and then Jess confessed what she had done.

'I wonder at ye, woman,' said Hendry sternly; and lifting the money he climbed up to the attic with it.

He pushed open the door, and confronted the lodger.

‘Take back yer siller,’ he said, laying it on the table, ‘an’ leave my hoose. Man, you’re a pitiable crittur to tak the chance, when I was oot, o’ playin’ on the povert, o’ an onweel woman.’

It was with such unwonted severity as this that Hendry called upon Jamie to follow him to church; but the boy went off, and did not return till dusk, defiant and miserable. Jess had been so terrified that she forgave him everything for sight of his face, and Hendry prayed for him at family worship with too much unction. But Leeby cried as if her tender heart would break. For a long time Jamie refused to look at her, but at last he broke down.

‘If ye go on like that,’ he said, ‘I’ll gang awa oot an’ droon mysel, or be a sojer.’

This was no uncommon threat of his, and sometimes, when he went off, banging the door violently, she ran after him and brought him back. This time she only wept the more, and so both went to bed in misery. It was after midnight that Jamie rose and crept to Leeby's bedside. Leeby was shaking the bed in her agony. Jess heard what they said.

'Leeby,' said Jamie, 'dinna greet, an' I'll never do 't again.'

He put his arms round^r her, and she kissed him passionately.

'Oh, Jamie,' she said, 'hae ye prayed to God to forgie ye?'

Jamie did not speak.

'If ye was to die this nicht,' cried Leeby, 'an' you no made it up wi' God, ye wouldna gang to heaven. Jamie, I canna sleep till ye've made it up wi' God.'

But Jamie still hung back. Leeby slipped from her bed, and went down on her knees.

'O God, O dear God,' she cried, 'mak Jamie to pray to you!'

Then Jamie went down on his knees too, and they made it up with God together.

This is a little thing for me to remember all these years' and yet how fresh and sweet it keeps Leeby in my memory.

Away up in the glen, my lonely schoolhouse lying deep, as one might say, in a sea of snow, I had many hours in the long years by for thinking of my friends in Thrums and mapping out the future of Leeby and Jamie. I saw Hendry and Jess taken to the churchyard, and Leeby left alone in the house. I saw Jamie fulfil his promise to his mother, and take Leeby, that stainless young woman, far away to London, where they had a home together. Ah, but these were only the idle dreams of a dominie. The Lord willed it otherwise.

CHAPTER XIX

A TALE OF A GLOVE

So long as Jamie was not the lad. Jess twinkled gleefully over tales of sweethearting. There was little Kitty Lamby who used to skip in of an evening, and, squatting on a stool near the window, unwind the roll of her enormities. A wheedling thing she was, with an ambition to drive men crazy, but my presence killed the gossip on her tongue, though I liked to look at her. When I entered, the wag-at-the-wa' clock had again possession of the kitchen. I never heard more than the end of a sentence :

‘ An’ did he really say he would fling himself into the dam, Kitty ? ’

Or—‘ True as death, Jess, he kissed me.’

Then I wandered away from the kitchen, where I was not wanted, and marvelled to know that Jess of the tender heart laughed most merrily when he really did say that he was going straight to the dam. As no body was found in the dam in those days, whoever he was he must have thought better of it.

But let Kitty, or any oth^r maid, cast a glinting eye on Jamie, then Jess no longer smiled. If he returned the glance she sat silent in her chair till Leeby laughed away her fears.

‘ Jamie ’s no the kind, mother,’ Leeby would say. ‘ Na, he ’s quiet, but he sees through them. They dinna draw his leg (get over him).’

‘ Ye never can tell, Leeby. The laddies ’at ’s maist ill to get sometimes gangs up in a flame a’ at aince, like a bit o’ paper.’

‘ Ay, weel, at ony rate Jamie ’s no on fire yet.’

Though clever beyond her neighbours, Jess lost all her sharpness if they spoke of a lassie for Jamie.

‘ I warrant,’ Tibbie Birse said one day in my hearing, ‘ ’at there ’s some leddy in London he ’s thinkin’ o’. Ay, he ’s been a guid laddie to ye, but i’ the course o’ nature he ’ll be settlin’ dune soon.’

Jess did not answer, but she was a picture of woe.

‘Ye’re lettin’ what Tibbie Birse said lie on yer mind,’ Leeby remarked, when Tibbie was gone. ‘What can it matter what she thinks?’

‘I canna help’it, Leeby,’ said Jess. ‘Na, an’ I canna bear to think o’ Jamie bein’ mairit. It would lay me low to loss my laddie. No yet, no yet.’

‘But, mother,’ said Leeby, quoting from the minister at weddings, ‘ye’wouldna be lossin’ a son, but juist gainin’ a dochter.’

‘Dinna haver, Leeby,’ answered Jess, ‘I want nane o’ thae dochters; na, na.’

This talk took place while we were still awaiting Jamie’s coming. He had only been with us one day when Jess made a terrible discovery. She was looking so mournful when I saw her, that I asked Leeby what was wrong.

‘She’s brocht it on hersel,’ said Leeby. ‘Ye see she was up sune i’ the mornin’ to begin to the darnin’ o’ Jamie’s stockin’s an’ to warm his sark at the fire afore he put it on. He woke up, an’ cried to her ’at he wasna accustomed to ha’en his things warmed for him. Ay, he cried it oot fell thrawn, so she took it into her head 'at there was something in his pouch he didna want her to see. She was even onaisy last nicht.'

I asked her what had aroused Jess's suspicions last night.

'Ou, ye would notice 'at she sat devourin' him wi' her een, she was so lifted up at ha'en 'im again. Weel, she says noo 'at she saw 'im twa or three times put his hand in his pouch as if he was findin' to mak sure 'at something was safe. So when he fell asleep again this mornin' she got haud o' his jacket to see if there was onything in 't. I advised her not to do 't, but she couldna help hersel. She put in her hand, an' pu'd it oot. That's what's makkin her look sae ill.'

'But what was it she found?'

'Did I no tell ye? I'm gaen dottle, I think. It was a glove, a woman's glove, in a bit paper. Ay, though she's sittin' still she's near frantic.'

I said I supposed Jess had put the glove back in Jamie's pocket.

'Na,' said Leeby, 'deed no. She wanted to fling it on the back o' the fire, but I wouldna let her. That's it she has aneath her apron.'

Later in the day I remarked to Leeby that Jamie was very 'dull.

'He's missed it,' she explained.

'Has any one mentioned it to him,' I asked, 'or has he inquired about it?'

'Na,' said Leeby, 'there hasna been a syllup (syllable) aboot it. My mōther's fleid to mention 't, an' he doesna like to speak aboot it either.'

'Perhaps he thinks he has lost it?'

'Nae fear o' him,' Leeby said. 'Na, he kens fine wha has 't.'

I never knew how Jamie came by the glove, nor whether it had originally belonged to her who made him forget the window at the top of the brae. At the time I looked on as at play-acting, rejoicing in the happy ending. Alas! in the real life how are we to know when we have reached an end?

But this glove, I say, may not have been that woman's, and if it was, she had not then be-devilled him. He was too sheepish to demand it back from his mother, and already he cared for it too much to laugh at Jess's theft with Leeby. So it was that a curious game at chess was played with the glove, the players a silent pair.

Jamie cared little to read books, but on the day following Jess's discovery, I found him on his knees in the attic looking through mine. A little box, without a lid, held them all, but they seemed a great library to him.

'There's readin' for a lifetime in them,' he said. 'I was juist takkin a look through them.'

His face was guilty, however, as if his hand had been caught in a money-bag, and I wondered what had enticed the lad to my books. I was still standing pondering when Leeby ran up the stair; she was so active that she generally ran, and she grudged the time lost in recovering her breath.

'I'll put yer books richt,' she said, making her word good as she spoke. 'I kent Jamie had been ransackin' up here, though he came up rale canny. Ay, ye would notice he was in his stockin' soles.'

I had not noticed this, but I remembered now his slipping from the room very softly. If he wanted a book, I told Leeby, he could have got it without any display of cunning.

‘It’s no a book he’s lookin’ for,’ she said, ‘na, it’s his glove.’

The time of day was early for Leeby to gossip, but I detained her for a moment.

‘My mother’s hoddied (hid) it,’ she explained, ‘an’ he winna speir nae queistions. But he’s lookin’ for’t. He was ben’in the room searchin’ the drawers when I was up i’ the toon in the forenoon. Ye see he pretends no to be carin’ afore me, an’ though my mother’s sittin’ sae quiet-like at the window she’s hearkenin’ a’ the time. Ay, an’ he thocht I had hod it up here.’

But where, I asked, was the glove hid?

‘I ken nae mair than yersel,’ said Leeby. ‘My mother’s gien to hoddin things. She has a place aneath the bed whaur she keeps the siller, an’ she’s no speakin’ aboot the glove to me noo, because she thinks Jamie an’ me’s in comp (company). I speired at her whaur she had hod it, but she juist said, “What would I be doin’ hoddin’t?” She’ll never admit to me ’at she hods the siller either.’

Next day Leeby came to me with the latest news.

'He's found it,' she said, 'ay, he's got the glove again. Ye see what put him on the wrang scent was a notion 'at I had put it some gait. He kent 'at if she'd hod it, the kitchen maun be the place, but he thoct she'd gien it to me to hod. He came upon 't by accident. It was aneath the paddin' o' her chair.'

Here, I thought, was the end of the glove incident, but I was mistaken. There were no presses or drawers with locks in the house, and Jess got hold of the glove again. I suppose she had reasoned out no line of action. She merely hated the thought that Jamie should have a woman's glove in his possession.

'She beats a' wi' cuteness,' Leeby said to me. 'Jamie didna put the glove back in his pouch. Na, he kens her ower weel by this time. She was up, though, lang afore he was wauken, an' she gaed almost strecht to the place whaur he had hod it. I believe she lay wauken a' nicht thinkin' oot whaur it would be. Ay, it was aneath the mattress. I saw her hod-din't i' the back o' the drawer, but I didna let on.'

I quite believed Leeby when she told me afterwards that 'she had watched Jamie feeling beneath the mattress.

'He had a face,' she said, 'I assure ye, he had a face, when he discovered the glove was gone again.'

'He maun be terrible ta'en up about it,' Jess said to Leeby, 'or he wouldna keep it aneath the mattress.'

'Od,' said Leeby, 'it was yersel 'at drove him to 't.'

Again Jamie recovered his property, and again Jess got hold of it. This time he looked in vain. I learnt the fate of the glove from Leeby.

'Ye mind 'at she keepit him at hame frae the kirk on Sabbath, because he had a cauld?' Leeby said. 'Ay, me or my father would hae a gey ill cauld afore she would let's bide at hame frae the kirk; but Jamie's different. Weel, mair than aince she's been near speakin' to 'im about the glove, but she grew fleid aye. She was sae terrified there was something in 't.'

‘ On Sabbath, though, she had him to hersel, an’ he wasna so bright as usual. She sat wi’ the Bible on her lap, pretendin’ to read, but a’ the time she was takkin keeks (glances) at him. I dinna ken ‘at he was broodin’ ower the glove, but she thocht he was, an’ juis’ afore the kirk came oot she couldna stand it nae langer. She put her hand in her pouch, an’ pu’d oot the glove, wi’ the paper round it, juist as it had been when she came upon ‘t.

‘ “ That ‘s yours, Jamie,” she said ; “ it was ill-dune o’ me to tak it, but I couldna help it.”

‘ Jamie put oot his hand, an’ syne he drew ‘t back. “ It ‘s no a thing o’ nae consequence, mother,” he said.

‘ “ Wha is she, Jamie ? ” my mother said.

‘ He turned awa his heid—so she telt me. “ It ‘s a lassie in London,” he said, “ I dinna ken her muckle.”

‘ “ Ye maun ken her weel,” my mother persisted, “ to be carryin’ aboot her glove ; I ‘m dootin ye ‘re gey fond o’ her, Jamie ? ”

‘ “ Na,” said Jamie, “ a’m no. There ‘s no naebody I care for like yersel, mother.”

“ “ Ye wouldna carry aboot onything o’ mine, Jamie,” my mother said ; but he says, “ Oh, mother, I carry aboot yer face wi’ me aye ; an’ sometimes at nicht I kind o’ greet to think o’ ye.”

‘ Ay, after that I’ve nae doot he was sittin’ wi’ his airms aboot her. She didna tell me that, but weel he kens it’s what she likes, an’ she maks no pretence o’ it’s ‘no bein’. But for a’ he said and did, she noticed him put the glove back in his inside pouch.

“ “ It’s wrang o’ me, Jamie,” she said, “ but I canna bear to think o’ ye carryin’ that aboot sae carefu’. No, I canna help it.”

‘ Weel, Jamie, the crittur, took it oot o’ his pouch, an’ kind o’ hesitated. Syne he lays’t on the back o’ the fire, an’ they sat thegither glowerin’ at it.

“ “ Noo, mother,” he says, “ you’re satisfied, are ye no ? ”

‘ Ay,’ Leebie ended her story, ‘ she said she was satisfied. But she saw ’at he laid it on the fire fell fond-like.’

CHAPTER XI.

THE GHOST CRADLE

OUR dinner-hour was twelve o'clock, and Hendry, for a not incomprehensible reason, called this meal his brose. Frequently, however, while I was there to share the expense, broth was put on the table, with beef to follow in clean plates, much to Hendry's distress, for the comfortable and usual practice was to eat the beef from the broth-plates. Jess, however, having three whole white plates and two cracked ones, insisted on the meals being taken genteelly, and her husband, with a look at me, gave way.

'Half a pound o' boiling beef an' a penny bone' was Leeby's almost invariable order when she dealt with the flesher, and Jess had always neighbours poorer than herself who got a plateful of the broth. She never had anything without remembering some old body who would be the better for a little of it.

Among those who must have missed Jess sadly after she was gone was Johnny Proctor, a half-witted man who, because he could not work, remained straight at a time of life when most weavers, male and female, had lost some inches of their stature. For as far back as my memory goes, Johnny had got his brose three times a week from Jess, his custom being to walk in without ceremony, and, drawing a stool to the table, tell Leebie that he was now ready. One day, however, when I was in the garden putting some rings on a fishing-wand, Johnny pushed by me, with no sign of recognition on his face. I addressed him, and, after pausing undecidedly, he ignored me. When he came to the door, instead of flinging it open and walking in, he knocked primly, which surprised me so much that I followed him.

‘Is this whaur Mistress McQuimpha lives?’ he asked, when Leebie, with a face ready to receive the minister himself, came at length to the door.

I knew that the gentility of the knock had taken both her and her mother aback.

‘Hoots, Johnny,’ said Leeby, ‘what haver’s this? Come awa in.’

Johnny seemed annoyed.

‘Is this whaur Mistress McQu^umpha lives?’ he repeated.

‘Say ’at it is,’ cried Jess, who was quicker in the uptake than her daughter.

‘Of course this is whaur Mistress McQ^umpha lives,’ Leeby then said, ‘as weel ye ken, for ye had yer dinner here no twa hours syne.’

‘Then,’ said Johnny, ‘Mistress Tully’s compliments to her, and would she kindly lend the christenin’ robe, an’ also the tea-tray, if the same be na needed?’

Having delivered his message as instructed, Johnny consented to sit down until the famous christening robe and the tray were ready, but he would not talk, for that was not in the bond. Jess’s sweet face beamed over the compliment Mrs. Tully, known on ordinary occasions as Jean McTaggart, had paid her, and, after Johnny had departed laden, she told me how the tray, which had a great bump in the middle, came into her possession.

‘Ye’ve often heard me speak about the time when I was a lassie workin’ at the farm o’ the Bog? Ay, that was afore me and Hendry kent ane anither, an’ I was as fleet on my feet in thae days as Leeby is noo. It was Sam’l Fletcher ’at was the farmer, but he maun hae been gone afore you was mair than born. Mebbe, though, ye ken ’at he was a terrible invalid, an’ for the hinmost years o’ his life he sat in a muckle chair nicht an’ day. Ay, when I took his denner to ’im, on that very tray ’at Johnny cam for, I little thocht ’at by an’ by I would be sae keepit in a chair mysel.

“But the thinkin’ o’ Sam’l Fletcher’s case is ane o’ the things ’at maks me awfu’ thankfu’ for the lenient way the Lord has aye dealt wi’ me; for Sam’l couldna move oot o’ the chair, aye sleepin’ in ’t at nicht, an’ I can come an’ gang between mine and my bed. Mebbe ye think I’m no much better off than Sam’l, but that’s a terrible mistak. What a glory it would hae been to him if he could hae gone frae one end o’ the kitchen to the ither. Ay, I’m sure o’ that.

‘ Sam’l was rale weel liked, for he was soft-spoken to everybody, an’ fond o’ ha’en a gossip wi’ ony ane ’at was aboot the farm. We didna care sae muckle for the wife, Eppie Lownie, for she managed the farm, an’ she was fell hard an’ terrible reserved we thocht, no even likin’ ony body to get friendly wi’ the mester, as we called Sam’l. Ay, we made a richt mistak.’

As I had heard ’frequently of this queer, mournful mistake made by those who considered Sam’l unfortunate in his wife, I turned Jess on to the main line of her story.

‘ It was the ghost cradle, as they named it, ’at I meant to tell ye aboot. The Bog was a bigger farm in thae days than noo, but I daur say it has the new steadin’ yet. Ay, it winna be new noo, but at the time there was sic a commotion aboot the ghost cradle, they were juist puttin’ the new steadin’ up. There were sax or mair masons at it, wi’ the lads on the farm helpin’, an’ as they were all sleepin’ at the farm, there was great stir aboot the place. I couldna tell ye hoo the story aboot the farm’s being haunted rose, to begin wi’, but I mind fine hoo fleid I was ; ay, an' no only me, but every man-body an' woman-body on the farm. It was aye late 'at the soond began, an' we never saw naething, we juist heard it. The masons said they wouldna hae been sae fleid if they could hae seen 't, but it never was seen. It had the soond o' a cradle rockin', an' when we lay in our beds hearkenin', it grew louder an' louder till it wasna to be borne,' an' the women-folk fair skirled wi' fear. The mester was intimate wi' a' the stories aboot ghosts an' water-kelpies an' sic like, an' we couldna help listenin' to them. But he aye said 'at ghosts 'at was juist heard an' no seen was the maist fearsome an' wicked. For all there was sic fear ower the hale farm-toon 'at naebody would gang ower the door alane after the gloamin' cam, the mester said he wasna fleid to sleep i' the kitchen by 'imself. We thocht it richt brave o' 'im, for ye see he was as helpless as a bairn.

' Richt queer stories rose about the cradle, an' travelled to the ither farms. The wife didna like them ava, for it was said 'at there maun hae been some awful murder o' an infant on the farm, or we wouldna be haunted by a cradle. Syne folk began to mind 'at there had been nae bairns born on the farm as far back as anybody kent, an' it was said 'at some lang syne crime had made the Bog cursed.

' Dinna think 'at we juist lay in our beds or sat round the fire shakkin wi' fear. Everything 'at could be dune was dune. In the day-time, when naething was heard, the masons explored a' place i' the farm, in the hope o' findin' oot 'at the sound was caused by sic a thing as the wind playin' on the wood in the garret. Even at nights, when they couldna sleep wi' the soond, I 've kent them rise in a body an' gang all ower the house wi' lights. I 've seen them climbin' on the new steadin', crawlin' along the rafters haudin' their cruizey lamps afore them, an' us women-bodies shiverin' wi' fear at the door. It was on ane o' thae nights 'at a mason fell off the rafters an' broke his leg. Weel, sic a state was the men in to find oot what it was 'at was terrifyin' them sae muckle, 'at the rest o' them climbed up at aince to the place he 'd fallen frae, thinkin' there was something there 'at had fleid 'im. But though they crawled back an' forrit there was nae-thing ava.

'The rockin' 'was louder, we thocht, after that nicht, an' syne the men said it would go on till somebody was killed. That idea took a richt haud o' them, an' twa ran awa back to Tilliedrum, whaur they had come frae. They gaed thegither i' the middle o' the nicht, an' it was thocht next mornin' 'at the ghost had spirited them awa.

'Ye couldna conceive hoo low-spirited we all were after the masons had gien up hope o' findin' a nat'ral cause for the soond. At ord'nar times there's no ony mair lightsome place than a farm after the men hae come in to their supper, but at the Bog we sat dour and sullen; an' there wasna a mason or a farm-servant 'at would gang by 'imself as far as the end o' the hoose whaur the peats was keepit. The mistress maun hae saved some siller that spring through the Egyptians (gypsies) keepin' awa, for the farm had got sic an ill name, 'at nae tinkler would come near 't at nicht. The tailor-man an' his laddie, 'at should hae bidden wi' us to sew things for the men, walkit off fair skeered one mornin', an' settled doon at the farm o' Craigiebuckle, fower mile awa,* whaur our lads had to gae to them. Ay, I mnd the tailor's sendin' the laddie for the money owin' him; he hadna the speerit to venture agan within soond o' the cradle 'imsel. The mer on the farm, though, couldna blame 'im for that. They were juist as flichtered themsels, an' mony a time I saw them hittin' the dogs for whinin' at the soond. The wy the dogs took on was fearsome in itsel, for they seemed to ken, aye when nicht cam on, 'at the rockin' would sune begin; an' if they werena chained they cam runnin' to the hoose. I hae heard the hale glen fu, as ye nicht say, wi' the whinin' o' dogs, for the dogs on the other farms took up the cry, an' in a glen ye can hear soonds terrible far awa at nicht.

'As lang as we sat i' the kitchen, listenin' to what the mester had to say aboot the ghosts in his young days, the cradle would be still, but we were nae suner awa speeritless to our beds than it began, an' sometimes it lasted till mornin'. We lookit upon the mester almost wi' awe, sittin' there sae helpless in his chair, an' no fleid to be left alane. He had lang white hair, an' a saft bonny face 'at would hae made 'im respeckit by onybody, an' aye when we speired if he wasna fleid to be left alane, he said, "Them 'at has a clear conscience has naething to fear frae ghosts."

'There was some 'at said the curse would never leave the farm till the house was razed to the ground, an' it's the truth I'm tellin' ye when I say there was talk among the men aboot settin' t on fire. The mester was richt stern when he heard o' that, quotin' frae Scripture in a solemn wy 'at abashed the masons, but he said 'at in his opeenion there was a bairn buried on the farm, an' till it was found the cradle would go on rockin'. After that the masons dug in a lot o' places lookin' for the body, an' they found some queer things, too, but never nae sign o' a murdered litlin. Ay, I dinna ken what would hae happened if the commotion had gone on muckle langer. One thing I'm sure o' is 'at the mistress would hae gaen daft, she took it a' sae terriole to heart.

'I lauch at it noo, but I tell ye I used to tak my heart to my bed in my moun'. If ye hinna heard the story, I dinna think e'll be able to guess what the ghost cradle was '

I said I had been trying to think what the tray had to do with it.

'It had everything to do w' t,' said Jess; 'an' if the masons had kent hoo that cradle was rockit, I think they would hae killed the mester. It was Eppie 'at found oot, an' she telt naebody but me, though mony a ane kens noo. I see ye canna mak it oot yet, so I'll tell ye what the cradle was. The tray was keepit against the kitchen wall near the mester, an' he played on 't wi' his foot. He made it gang bump, bump, an' the soond was juist like a cradle rockin'. Ye could hardly believe sic a thing would hae made that din, but it did, an' ye see we lay in our beds hearkenin' for 't. Ay, when Eppie telt me, I could scarce believe 'at that guid devout-lookin' man could hae been sae wicked. Ye see, when he found hoo terrified

we a' were, he keepit it up. The wy Eppie found out i' the tail o' the day was by wonderin' at 'im sleepin' sae muckle in the daytime. He did that so as tɔ be fresh for his sport at nicht. What a fine releegious man we thocht 'im, too !

'Eppie couldna bear the very sicht o' the tray after that, an' she telt me to break it up ; but I keepit it, ye see. The lump i' the middle 's the mark, as ye may say, o' 'the auld man's foot.'

CHAPTER XII

THE TRAGEDY OF A WIFE

WERE Jess still alive to tell the life-story of Sam'l Fletcher and his wife, you could not hear it and sit still. The ghost cradle is but a page from the black history of a woman who married, to be blotted out from that hour. One case of the kind I myself have known, of a woman so good mated to a man so selfish that I cannot think of her even now with a steady mouth. Hers was the tragedy of living on, more mournful than the tragedy that kills. In Thrums the weavers spoke of 'lousing' from their looms, removing the chains, and there is something woeful in that. But pity poor Nanny Coutts, who took her chains to bed with her.

Nanny was buried a month or more before I came to the house on the braise, and even in Thrums the dead are seldom remembered for so long a time as that. But it was only after Sanders was left alone that we learned what a woman she had been, and how basely we had wronged her. She was an angel, Sanders went about whining when he had no longer a woman to ill-treat. He had this sentimental way with him, but it lost its effect after we knew the man.

‘A deevil couldna hae deserved waur treatment,’ Tammas Haggart said to him; ‘gang oot o’ my sicht, man.’

‘I’ll blame mysel till I die,’ Jess said, with tears in her eyes, ‘for no understandin’ puir Nanny better.’

So Nanny got sympathy at last, but not until her forgiving soul had left her tortured body. There was many a kindly heart in Thrums that would have gone out to her in her lifetime, but we could not have loved her without upbraiding him, and she would not buy sympathy at the price. What a little story it is, and how few words are required to tell it! He was a bad husband to her, and she kept it secret. That is Nanny’s life summed up. It is all that was left behind when her coffin went down the brae. Did she love him to the end, or was she only doing what she thought her duty? It is not for me even to guess. A good woman who suffers is altogether beyond man's reckoning. To such heights of self-sacrifice, we cannot rise. It crushes us; it ought to crush us on to our knees. For us who saw Nanny, infirm, shrunken, and so weary, yet a type of the noblest womanhood, suffering for years, and misunderstood her to the end, what expiation can there be? I do not want to storm at the man who made her life so burdensome. Too many years have passed for that, nor would Nanny take it kindly if I called her man names.

Sanders worked little after his marriage. He had a sore back, he said, which became a torture if he leant forward at his loom. What truth there was in this I cannot say, but not every weaver in Thrums could 'louse' when his back grew sore. Nanny went to the loom in his place, filling as well as weaving, and he walked about, dressed better than the common, and with cheerful words for those who had time to listen. Nanny got no approval even for doing his work as well as her own, for they were understood to have money, and Sanders let us think her merely greedy. We drifted into his opinions.

Had Jess been one of those who could go about, she would, I think, have read Nanny better than the rest of us, for her intellect was bright, and always led her straight to her neighbours' hearts. But Nanny visited no one, and so Jess only knew her by hearsay. Nanny's standoffishness, as it was called, was not a popular virtue, and she was blamed still more for trying to keep her husband out of other people's houses. He was so frank and full of gossip, and she was so reserved. He would go everywhere, and she nowhere. He had been known to ask neighbours to tea, and she had shown that she wanted them away, or even begged them not to come. We were not accustomed to go behind the face of a thing, and so we set down Nanny's inhospitality to churlishness or greed. Only after her death, when other women had to attend him, did we get to know what a tyrant Sanders was at his own hearth. The ambition of Nanny's life was that we should never know it, that we should con-head was the ablest to help, and the sweetest memory I have of the farmer and his wife is the delicate way they offered it. You who read will see Jess wince at the offer of charity. But the poor have fine feeling; beneath the grime, as you will discover if you care to look for them, and when Jess said she would bake if any one would buy, you would wonder to hear how many kindly folk came to her door for scones.

She had the house to herself at nights, but Tibbie Birse was with her early in the morning, and other neighbours dropped in. Not for long did she have to wait for the summons to the better home.

‘Na,’ she said to the minister, who has told me that he was a better man from knowing her, ‘my thochts is no nane set on the vanities o’ the world noo. I kenna hoo I could ever hae haen sic an ambection to hae thae stuff-bottomed chairs.’

I have tried to keep away from Jamie, whom the neighbours sometimes upbraided in her presence. It is of him you who read would like to hear, and I cannot pretend that Jess did not sit at her window looking for him.

‘ Even when she was bakin’,’ Tibbie told me, ‘ she aye had an eye on the brae. If Jamie had come at ony time when it was licht she would hae seen him as sune as he turned the corner.’

‘ If he ever comes back, the sacket (rascal),’ T’nowhead said to Jess, ‘ we’ll show ’im the door gey quick.’

Jess just looked, and all the women knew how she would take Jamie to her arms.

We did not know of the London woman then, and Jess never knew of her. Jamie’s mother never for an hour allowed that he had become anything but the loving laddie of his youth.

‘ I ken him ower weel,’ she always said, ‘ my ain Jamie.’

Toward the end she was sure he was dead. I do not know when she first made up her mind to this, nor whether it was not merely a phrase for those who wanted to discuss him with her. I know that she still sat at the window looking at the elbow of the brae.

The minister was with her when she died.

She was in her chair, and he asked her, as was his custom, if there was any particular chapter which she would like him to read. Since her husband's death she had always asked for the fourteenth of John, 'Hendry's chapter,' as it is still called among a very few old people in Thrums. This time she asked him to read the sixteenth chapter of Genesis.

'When I came to the thirteenth verse,' the minister told me, "'And she called the name of the Lord that spake unto her, Thou God seest me," she covered her face with her two hands, and said, "Joey's text, Joey's text. Oh, but I grudged ye sair, Joey."'

'I shut the Book,' the minister said, 'when I came to the end of the chapter, and then I saw that she was dead. It is my belief that her heart broke one-and-twenty years ago.'

CHAPTER XXII

JAMIE'S HOME-COMING

ON a summer day, when the sun was in the weavers' workshops, and bairns hopped solemnly at the game of palaulays, or gaily shook their bottles of sugarelly water into a froth, Jamie came back. The first man to see him was Hookey Crewe, the post.

'When he came frae London,' Hookey said afterwards at T'nowhead's pigsty, 'Jamie used to wait for me at Zoar, i' the north end o' Tilliedrum. He carried his box ower the market muir, an' sat on 't at Zoar, waitin' for me to catch 'im up. Ay, the day afore yesterday me an' the powny was clatterin' by Zoar, when there was Jamie standin' in his identical place. He hadna nae box to sit upon, an' he was far frae bein' weel in order, but I kent 'im at aince, an' I saw 'at he was waitin' for me. So I drew up, an' waved my hand to 'im.'

'I would hae drove strauch.. by 'im,' said T'nowhead ; ' them 'at leaves their auld mother to want doesna deserve a lift.'

' Ay, ye say that sittin' there ' Hookey said : ' but, lads, I saw his face, an' as sure as death it was sic an awfu' meeserable face 'at I couldna but pu' the powny up. Weel, he stood for the space o' a meenute lookin' straucht at me, as if he would like to 'come forrit but dauredna, an' syne he turned an' strided ower the muir like a huntit thing. I sat still i' the cart, an' when he was far awa he stoppit an' lookit again, but a' my cryin' wouldna bring him a step back, an' i' the end I drove on. I've thocht since syne 'at he didna ken whether his fowk was livin' or deid, an' was fleid to speir.'

' He didna ken,' said T'nowhead, ' but the faut was his ain. It's ower late to be ta'en up aboot Jess noo.'

' Ay, ay, T'nowhead,' said Hookey, ' it's aisy to you to speak like that. Ye didna see his face.'

It is believed that Jamie walked from Tillie-drum, though no one is known to have met him on the road. Some two hours after the post left him he was seen by old Rob Angus at the saw-mill.

‘I was sawin’ awa with a’ my micht,’ Rob said, ‘an’ little Rob was haudin’ the booards, for they were silly bit things, when something made me look at the window. It couldna hae been a tap on ’t, for the birds has used me to that, an’ it would hardly be a shadow, for little Rob didna look up. Whatever it was I stoppit i’ the middle o’ a booard, an’ lookit up, an’ there I saw Jamie McQumpha. He joukit back when our een met, but I saw him weel; ay, it’s a queær thing to say, but he had the face o’ a man ’at had come straucht frae hell.’

‘I stood starin’ at the window,’ Angus continued, ‘after he ’d gone, an’ Robbie cried oot to ken what was the maiter wi’ me. Ay, that brocht me back to mysel, an’ I hurried oot to look for Jamie, but he wasna to be seen. That face gae me a turn.’

From the saw-mill to the house at the top of the brae, some may remember, the road is up the commonty. I do not think any one saw Jamie on the commonty, though there were those to say they met him.

'He gae me sic a look,' a wor an said, 'at I was fleid an' ran hame,' but sho did not tell the story until Jamie's home-comin^g had become a legend.

There were many women hanging out their washing on the commonty that day, and none of them saw him. 'I think Janie must have approached his old home by the fields, and probably he held back until the gloaming.

The young woman who was now mistress of the house at the top of the brae both saw and spoke with Jamie.

'Twa or three times,' she said, 'I had seen a man walk quick up the brae an' by the door. It was gettin' dark, but I noticed 'at he was short an' thin, an' I would hae said he wasna nane weel if it hadna been 'at he gaed by at sic a steek. He didna look our wy—at least no when he was close up, an' I set him doon for some gaen aboot body. Na, I saw naething about 'im to be fleid at.

'The aucht o'clock bell was ringin' when I saw 'im to speak to. My twa-year-auld bairn was standin' aboot the door, an' I was makkin some porridge for my man's supper when I heard the bairny skirlin'. She came runnin' in to the house an' hung i' my wrapper, an' she was hingin' there when I gaed to the door to see what was wrang.

' It was the man I'd seen passin' the hoose. He was standin' at the gate, which, as a'boddy kens, is but sax steps frae the hoose, an' I wondered at 'im neither runnin' awa nor comin' forrit. I speired at 'im what he meant by terrifyin' a bairn, but he didna say naething. He juist stood. It was ower dark to see his face richt, an' I wasna nane ta'en aback yet, no till he spoke. Oh, but he had a fearsome word when he did speak. It was a kind o' like a man hoarse wi' a cauld, an' yet no that either.

' " Wha bides i' this hoose ? " he said, aye standin' there.

' " It's Davit Patullo's hoose," I said, " an' a'm the wife."

' " Where's Hendry McQumpha ? " he speired.

“ He ’s deid,” I said.

‘ He stood still for a fell while

“ An’ his wife, Jess ? ” he said.

“ She ’s deid too,” I said. •

‘ I thocht he gae a groan, but it may hae been the gate.

“ There was a dochter, Leeb / ? ” he said.

“ Ay,” I said, “ she was ta’en first.”

‘ I saw ’im put up^h his hands to his face, an’ he cried oot. “ Leebby too ! ” an’ syne he kind o’ fell agin the dyke. I never kent ’im nor nane o’ his fowk, but I had heard aboot them, an’ I saw ’at it would be the son frae London. It wasna for me to judge ’im, an’ I said t^o ’im would he no come in by an’ tak a rest. I was nearer ’im by that time, an’ it ’s an awfu’ haver to say ’at he had a face to frighten fowk. It was a rale guid face, but no ava what a body would like to see on a young man. I felt mair like greetin’ mysel when I saw his face than drawin’ awa frae ’im.

‘ But he wouldna come in. “ Rest,” he said, like ane speakin’ to ’imsel, “ na, there ’s nae mair rest for me.” I didna weel ken what mair to say to 'im, for he aye stood on, an' I wasna even sure 'at he saw me. He raised his heid when he heard me tellin' the bairn no to tear my wrapper. .

“ “ Dinna set yer heart ower muckle on that bairn,” he cried oot, sharp like. “ I was aince like her, an' I used to hing aboot my mother, too, in that very roady. Ay, I thoct I was fond o' her, an' she thoct'it too. Tak a care, wuman, 'at that bairn doesna grow up to murder ye.”

‘ He gae a lauch when he saw me tak haud o' the bairn, an' syne a' at aince he gaed awa quick. But he wasna far doon the brae when he turned an' came back.

“ “ Ye 'll mebbe tell me,” he said richt low, “ if ye hae the furniture 'at used to be my mother's ? ”

“ “ Na,” I said, “ it was roupit, an' I kenna whaur the things gaed, for me an' my man comes frae Tilliedrum.”

“ “ Ye wouldna hae heard,” he said, “ wha got the muckle airm-chair 'at used to sit i' the kitchen i' the window 'at looks ower the brae ? ”

““ I couldna be sure,” I said, “ but there was an airm-chair ’at gaed to Tibbie Birse. If it was the ane ye mean, it a’ gaed to bits, an’ I think they burned it. It was gey dune.”

““ Ay,” he said, “ it was gey dune.”

““ There was the chairs ben ’ the room,” he said, after a while.

‘ I said I thocht ’Sanders Elshioner had got them at a bargain because twa o’ them was mended wi’ glue, an’ gey silly.

““ Ay, that ’s them,” he said, “ they were richt neat mended. It was my mother ’at glued them. I mind o’ her makkin the glue, an’ warnin’ me an’ my father no to sit on them. There was the clock too, an’ the stool ’at my mother got oot an’ into her bed wi’, an’ the basket ’at Leeby carried when she gaed the errands. The straw was aff the handle, an’ my father mended it wi’ strings.”

““ I dinna ken,” I said, “ whaur nane o’ thae gaed ; but did yer mother hae a staff ? ”

““ A little staff,” he said ; “ it was near black wi’ age. She couldna gang frae the bed to her chair withoot it. It was broadened oot at the foot wi' her leanin' on 't sae muckle."

" "I've heard tell," I said, "'at the dominie up i' Glen Quharity took awa the staff."

'He didna speir for nae other thing. He had the gate in his hand, but I dinna think he kent 'at he was swingin' 't back an' forrit. At last he let it go.

" "That's a'," he said, "I maun awa. Good-night, an' thank ye kindly."

'I watched 'im till he gaed oot o' sicht. He gaed doon the brae.'

We learnt afterwards from the gravedigger that some one spent great part of that night in the graveyard, and we believe it to have been Jamie. He walked up the glen to the school-house next forenoon, and I went out to meet him when I saw him coming down the path.

'Ay,' he said, 'it's me come back.'

I wanted to take him into the house and speak with him of his mother, but he would not cross the threshold.

'I came oot,' he said, 'to see if ye would gie me her staff—no 'at I deserve 't.'

I brought the staff out and handed it to him, thinking that he and I would soon meet again. As he took it I saw that his eyes were sunk back into his head. Two great tears hung on his eyelids, and his mouth closed in agony. He stared at me till the tears fell upon his cheeks, and then he went away.

That evening he was seen by many persons crossing the square. He went up the brae to his old home, and asked leave to go through the house for the last time. First he climbed up into the attic, and stood looking in, his feet still on the stair. Then he came down and stood at the door of the room, but he went into the kitchen.

‘I’ll ask one favour o’ ye,’ he said to the woman: ‘I would like ye to leave me here alane for juist a little while.’

‘I gaed oot,’ the woman said, ‘meanin’ to leave ’im to ’imself, but my bairn wouldna come, an’ he said, “Never mind her,” so I left her wi’ ’im, an’ closed the door. He was in a lang time, but I never kent what he did, for the bairn juist aye greets when I speir at her.

‘I watched him frae the corner window gang doon the brae till he came to the corner. I thocht he turned round there an’ stood lookin’ at the hoose. He would see me better than I saw him, for my lamp was i’ the window, whaur I’ve heard tell his mother kept her cruizey. When my man came in I speired ‘at ‘im if he ‘d seen onybody standin’ at the corner o’ the brae, ‘an he said he thocht he ‘d seen somebody wi’ a little staff in his hand. Davit gaed doon to see if he was aye there after supper-time, but he was gone.’

Jamie was never again seen in Thrums.

THE END
